Can You Class
Your Cows As Dependents?

Many cows on North Carolina farms could be classified as dependents, even though their owners can't declare them as such for income tax purposes.

They are dependents, says R. L. Wynn, dairy specialist for the N. C. Agricultural Extension Service, because they do not produce enough to pay for the feed they consume, the housing they require, and the hours of labor spent in taking care of them.

Many dairy herds would produce better if the poorest cows were eliminated, Mr. Wynn said. A herd of 25 cows, for instance, might produce more milk if one poor producer was eliminated (cull) and her feed divided among the better producers. Then, in addition to greater profits, the dairyman would have less work or more time to improve his general management.

"The only reliable way to find low producers that will pull down a herd's efficiency is to keep some kind of records," Mr. Wynn continued. "There is a definite correlation between record keeping and high production per cow."

North Carolina cows on the Dairy Herd Improvement Association (DHIA) Record-keeping Program last year, produced an average of approximately 9,000 pounds of milk. This is to be compared with a production of only about 5,000 pounds by the average North Carolina cow.

The "Nickels for Know-How" program has brought in almost one million dollars for agricultural research since it was started in 1952.

WISELY - PREVENT FIRES - GROW MORE TREES

JACKSON COUNTY HOME FARM
3 Miles South of Sylva

Putting woodlands of a county into peak production usually means as much to that county's economy as a new industry.

Now, the pulp and paper industry has set up a demonstration forest farm to give you first-hand information on how best to grow trees in this area.

Known as a Pilot Forest, this demonstration farm forest will serve as your permanent guide to more profitable tree growing.

Here you can learn ALL phases of good forestry from planting to harvesting.
