Want Bluegills Big? Here're Some Good Tips

"To grow bluegills big, raise your pond's fertility quickly, as soon as winter cold begins to wane", say soil and water conservationists. This is a most significant fact that fish culturists have learned by experience in recent years.
Pond fertilization was first begun in America about 1938. Fisheries technicians recommended delay in applying fertilizer "until the spring rains are over". Farmers waited until May or June. Hundreds were disappointed because the bluegills quit growing after the second year. Now it has been proven that even April fertilization is too late to obtain satisfactory bluegill growth.
When bluegills stop spawning in the fall, the bass continue to eat hundreds of bluegill fingerlings every day. As the bass reduce the number of fingerling bluegills, the adult bluegills begin to grow — slowly at first then more rapidly. Growth is slow again during the colder days of winter, as fish feed very little in cold temperatures.
Then when the water begins to warm a little, bluegills are ready to grow larger; but only if the water is fertile enough to grow a lot of microscopic green algae to feed more pounds of worms. A farmer who waits until spring to renew his pond's fertility cannot expect big bluegills. The season when they grow most rapidly is only 100 to 120 days, usually February to June.
If runoff water from spring rains is too much for early fertilization, the watershed is too big. An owner can divert the water around. In most cases, however, the loss of fertile water is not as serious as was once thought. A fishpond owner in any case may have to lose a little fertilized water to make his bluegills a profitable size.

"To get the first three to five applications in quickly, fertilize every week or 10 days as you begin the year's program of water culture", are the instructions. "Fertilize until a white object cannot be seen 12 to 14 inches deep."
