

MONEY STILL NEEDED — 'Bootstrap' Trailer Will Be Outfitted

"Operation Bootstrap" is getting ready to roll, although collection cans are still out in many of the 12 participating counties and more money is needed to really "put the show on the road". Following a preliminary report by treasurer, J. C. Keeter, of Bryson City, at a meeting last week,

'Operation Bootstrap' seems to appeal so much to editors and television people that there seems to be a very good chance that some of the very popular TV programs might feature the trailer exhibit when it goes to New York or Chicago, and certain magazines are interested in writing feature stories with pictures.

The trailer will be filled with products made by Western North Carolina labor. Also, it will be staffed by a competent director who will be armed with industrial facts and figures to help with his selling job.

Rabun County Gets Federal Assistance

Neighboring Rabun County, Ga., has received approval of federal assistance for a watershed project on the head of the Little Tennessee River.

Up until about a year ago, Macon County and Rabun had been jointly seeking the assistance. Because of an apparent lack of interest here, however, Macon withdrew and the Georgia county submitted its own application.

Of the 90,000 acres embraced by the Little Tennessee watershed in both counties, Macon has roughly two-thirds, according to the local Soil Conservation Service.

Rabun County's assistance will be in the form of a five-year project to provide flood protection on a 36,700 acre watershed. A local and federal undertaking, the total cost of the project is estimated at $457,000. The federal share will be about $273,000.

The Soil Conservation Service here feels there may be enough interest in another year or so for Macon County to submit an application.

4-H club enrollment in North Carolina reached an all-time high in 1958.
