

Brady's BLARNEY

By A Brady Called J. P.

Writes a reader about my recent column on water:

"Please pass on to Brady my comment that a serious subject, such as last week's, is certainly less objectionable reading than some of his questionable 'humorous' topics!"

Well now, I must defend myself. I excused myself in that particular column by saying I preferred to keep my columns "light and semi-humorous", realizing that what's funny to some isn't to others. Like the fellow said when he kissed the cow, "Every one to his own likes and dislikes!"

I do appreciate, however, hearing the pros and cons from people. At least I know someone reads this column.

Now to more serious things. Still on the water vote, which comes up Saturday.

Some people say they're going to vote against the water bond issue because the aldermen have "bitten off more than they can chew". This "bite" apparently is the installation of a million gallon per day water filtration plant.

If having faith in the future growth of Franklin is biting off more than they can chew then the aldermen are guilty. They reason that it is much more economical to install a million gallon plant now than to face adding to a smaller one later as the town grows. This, it would seem is just good common business sense — and after all, our aldermen are good businessmen with common sense.

Mayor Burrell, for example, would be foolish to order one Chevrolet at a time for his business when there are a half dozen or more waiting one. Instead, he looks ahead, anticipates the needs of the business, and requests delivery of several new autos.

Another alderman, Dr. J. W. Kahn, doesn't perform surgery just to look around and see if anything is amiss inside a patient. He knows what he's doing beforehand.

Did Alderman Bill Bryant order a half-dozen hula hoops when the craze was booming here last year? Not on your life. He's a smart businessman and he had enough foresight to order many, many dozens.

Where would Alderman Ezra Shook be today if he pumped only five gallons of gas into his filling station storage tanks instead of filling them up?

Does Alderman A. G. Cagle advertise a special turkey dinner in his restaurant and begin serving with only one turkey? Not on your life! He plans ahead.

Did Frank L. Henry, Jr., throw up his hands and quit when fire destroyed his building? Sufficient water pressure, you'll recall, probably could have prevented this stunning loss. Stop just a minute and visualize, if you will, the devastation had the fire been on either side of Main Street. This alderman knows what it's like to be without water. He lives right below my house and neither dwelling has enough to water the lawn.

Prelo Dryman, another alderman, is a level-headed businessman who knows the value of planning ahead.

So, that's the situation. Can you honestly believe that our aldermen are out to deceive the town in which they make their living; a town that someday will belong to their children and their children's children?

Let's face it: These men are only looking to the future and in so doing are trying to provide a crying need for a town that wants to grow, but doesn't quite have enough muscle to pull itself up.

How long are we going to watch our young people leave the county and go North for work? As long as we follow the no-progress line of thought, that's how long.

Water is an essential item for prospective industry. The town
