LEAF RAKERS TAKE NOTE —
Coweeta Measures Fall Of Leaves Each Autumn

Over the years, research foresters at Coweeta Hydrologic Laboratory have measured the amount of leaves shed each autumn by our forest trees. Those who are raking their lawns will find it hard to believe that only four tons per acre is about the maximum produced in a year. Others, less learned in the school of experience, may be surprised to learn that one ton per acre is about the least amount of leaves cast by forest trees.

Currier, Maconian, Succumbs

George T. Currier, 68, of Cornelia, Ga., a Franklin native, died Tuesday of last week in Atlanta, Ga., after a brief illness.

Son of the late Charles and Mrs. Lola Smith Deal Currier, he spent most of his life in Cornelia. He was employed by the Railway Express Company at the time of his death.

Funeral services were held at the Cornelia Methodist Church, with burial in the Level Grove Cemetery.

Surviving are his wife, Mrs. Netta Long Currier, and two sons, John and Charles Currier, both of Atlanta.

HOLDS WORKSHOPS

Miss Martha Barnett, area supervisor for the state school lunchroom program, held workshops in Macon County Tuesday and Wednesday of last week. All lunchroom personnel attended.

leaves falling under each acre of forest trees. Heaviest leaf accumulations occur in densely forested coves while least foliage falls on ridge tops where trees usually are scattered and small. Many people find it hard to believe that a dense cover of small sprouts and seedling trees produce about the same amount of foliage as does a stand of fully grown trees. And, incidentally, the amount of bark, twigs, fruit, and dead branches which drop from trees throughout the year weigh about as much as the autumn leaf fall.
