Gobblers for Pinehurst

Holiday guests at Pinehurst are to feast this year on turkeys raised by members of North Carolina poultry clubs, according to information from A. G. Oliver, State Poultry Club Agent. Farm and home agents in the mountain counties are encouraging club members to cooperate in shipping turkeys to Pinehurst, and thus help to develop a local market for their birds.

The plan is for several counties to join together, drive or haul their turkeys to one point and load all at one time in a car. Each owner's birds are to be weighed separately before shipping and one county agent is to receive check and act as disbursing agent.

Last year farm agent Lindley, of Mitchell county, shipped a number of turkeys to Pinehurst and the quality of the birds was so well appreciated that the hotel management offered to take more turkeys this year. The top of the market is said to be assured for birds well fattened on corn. In fattening turkeys for this market it is pointed out that every pound of flesh gained means a high price for corn consumed.

Worst is to Come

When the Nineteenth Amendment was finally shoved across the line, we felt that there was at least some consolation in the conclusion of the row, in the removal of the obstreperous and beligerent female of the species from the political arena. Having gotten all she asked, we imagined that we would be free from further alarms; that she would hatch no fresh plots against masculine life, liberty and pursuit of happiness. But the worst, it seems, is yet to come. Miss Alice Paul, it appears, considers it necessary to secure the passage of a woman's suffrage enforcement bill—a sort of Volstead ballot act, that will reduce man's capacity for mischief to less than one-half of 1 per cent. of devilishness. That is, devilishness in the evasion of the Nineteenth Amendment. Miss Paul says her bill is simply a measure to prevent registration and other election officials from discriminating against persons because of sex. No one else had supposed that such legislation was required, but Miss Paul knows wicked man too well to take any chances on him. But if he doesn't watch out, he may wake up to find that Miss Paul has got him lassoed and tied, hand and foot.
