THE NEED FOR BETTER LATH.

Builders have long known that wooden lath has become a matter of the past for several reasons. Good lath is becoming so scarce that it is almost impossible to find, and it is too expensive to put on and too susceptible to fire.

Fireproof lath is a necessity, and something that can be applied rapidly is equally necessary. These needs are satisfied by the use of Rocklath, the Gypsum Compound Which is a permanent foundation for better plastering.

Rocklath is exactly what the name indicates, a mineral sheet that covers the studing in large pieces and to which the plaster adheres rigidly and firmly.

Sheetrock, another wall surface, is also a mineral board in big sections which can be used without plaster.
