VACHEL LINDSAY TO READ AT FLORA MacDONALD

Music, drama, poetry and the dance will be combined in a novel lecturerecital given next Monday night, March 16, in Flora MacDonald College auditorium by Vachel Lindsay, one of the most celebrated of modern American poets. He interpreted his own poems with all the passion and physical expression of an actor. These aloud, chanted or declaimed; in some cases they are to be danced to, also, and played as games. They possess a deep rhythm, with a rush and a real life in them. His "Chinese Nightingale" is thought by some to be the "greatest poem written in America since the Pilgrims came over." Mr. Lindsay, who is a modern troubadour, has tramped thousands of miles of this country, singing his songs from coast to coast. His work is by no means limited to America. A London paper not long ago published a eulogy to him in which the following appeared: "America can never be regarded as submerged by commercialism so long as Vachel Lindsay chants his songs from New York to New tee on the lecture and concert course are to be complimented on their varied and delightful selections. Sandhills residents are invited to hear Mr. Lindsay.
