U. S. Public Health Service Seeks Practical Pellagra Preventative

Scientists Experimenting with Foods To Curb Widespread Suffering From Disease

Scientists of the National Institute of Health at Washington are seeking to ascertain the crops having the highest pellagra preventative values which may be grown most easily by farmers in the area in which pellagra is prevalent.

The nutrition specialists of the United States Public Health Service, working at the Institute, hope that their studies will result in a practical solution of the problem of preventing pellagra, a nutritional disease, which has become widespread in parts of the dry area.

When the most valuable anti-pellagic crops are determined, this information will be available. The work is considered most important, because there probably are as many sufferers from pellagra in the United States as there are in any other country in the world.

In conjunction with its study of the nutritive value of crops, the National Institute of Health is attempting to concentrate—and, if possible, to isolate the pellagra preventative vitamin. The anti-pellagic vitamin never has been isolated, although its presence in specific foods is proven by the pellagra preventative effects of such foods when they are eaten.

Studies being undertaken now, however, are based on many years of previous research into the cause of pellagra. This work has been highly successful and undoubtedly has saved lives up to the present time.

The Institute, or Hygienic Laboratory, as it was known then, discovered the cause of pellagra. This discovery is probably one of the most significant steps forward in public health advancement during the last decade. The late Dr. Joseph Goldberger of the United States Public Health Service found that pellagra was caused by the lack of a certain nutritive substance, or vitamin in the diet. This finding threw a new light on pellagra, and has made possible the beneficial work now being done by the Public Health Service in attempting to eradicate pellagra.

The list of pellagra preventative foods available in the United States probably will be increased as a result of the studies of the National Institute of Health. Studies of the experimental pellagra preventative action of 22 additional foodstuffs have been completed, and the work goes on. For the prevention of pellagra it is necessary to have a well balanced diet the year around, and now is the time to prepare the winter garden, says Dr. J. Symington, M. D., local public health officer.

Watermelon, Yum!

The Editor Gets a Gift 'Most as Big as an Automobile Tire

Occasionally that friendly notion, once more common in the country newspaper field than of late, leads to the editorial sphere of influence the man, who looks upon the printery as exhibit hall for the products of the community. Which accounts for a watermelon from the Leslie Dairy up at Vass. The judges did not measure it accurately, but it wouldn't go through an automobile tire without crowding. That old Leslie farm has been a famous farm in its day, and it still makes the crops.

Curiously, it had hard luck with its grain crops. Big acreage, abundant yield, harvested in most approved manner. And then when time came to thresh out the grain Lady Luck crossed her fingers backward. Rains started about the harvest period. Not barn room enough to shelter the large amount of grain ready for the thresher, which it was intended to thresh without bringing it all in and threshing from the barn. But to make matters worse, the big grain crop all over the district made such a demand for threshing machines that the whole neighborhood for miles was caught in the same crack in the door. Much excellent grain suffered. But with all the hard luck the Moore county farms have more grain than in many a day, and corn is looking fine as a king.

Came one day to The Pilot office when it was in Vass a soldier of the Legion from Bingen on the Rhine. Tillman, he said was his name, and he had been gassed and otherwise affronted on the German frontier, but he knew how to catch the elevator on the linotype. Good printer, he proved, and to keep his hand in he bought some ground and set some hens. Showed what kind of hens they were at the poultry show at Vass last fall. Got a lot of 'em yet, and they are in the class with royalty. Planted a lot of watermelons this year to keep company with the rest of the garden, and three acres of cantaloupes. When Tillman isn't printing he is studying the life habits and metabolism and ancestry of cantaloupes. Folks who keep their noses clean and don't spell George Washington with a little j are allowed to buy his cantaloupes at market price, which is so low down at the present time as to be shameful.

Roberts and little Miss Anne Muse, niece of the hostess, were welcome guests. A musical contest was enjoyed, Mrs. L. R. Sugg winning the prize. At one thirty a cafeteria luncheon was serv-

How much is land worth?

Everybody has been asking that question while the assessments have been under way..

One wise man said, "Nothing." When asked how come he said, "Because when you buy anything here you buy sunshine, location, neighbors and the things that go with them. Take them away and you would have nothing left that any assessor would inquire about. He would not put it on the tax lists..

Plain enough, isn't it?

AND THESE THINGS YOU GET ON Weymouth Heights

AT SOUTHERN PINES, N. C.

Take off what is on the first half inch of ground on any land in the world and the rest of it is merely a place to put things. You can get that for nothing in the Sahara desert.

But the things you want are on Weymouth in plenty, and they give land its value..
