Theatre

At The Carolina

Something of a novelty in talking picture themes forms the basis of "The Brat," the film version of Maude Fulton's delightful stage play which was so successful on Broadway recently, and which is the attraction at the Carolina this Saturday afternoon and night. The story deals with the surprising upheavals in a quiet and wealthy family when its head, a successful author, brings home a pert and sassy Bowery girl as "color" for his forthcoming novel. The girl, who is "The Brat" of the title, promptly champions the younger brother, the black sheep of the family; attaches herself firmly to the author, much to the dismay of two society girls each of whom are extremely desirous of marrying him; reforms the brother and finally sees that he gets his rights—all in a fashion that promises much entertainment to the audience. Sally O'Neil, the piquant little Irish actress, is ideally cast in the title role. Her diminutive figure, her wide, appealing eyes and her perfect assumption of a "toity-toit street" accent all help make her performance, much the best of her screen career. Her great supporting cast consists of Frank Albertson, Virginia Cherrill, June Collyer, Farrell MacDonald, Mary Forbes and Albert Gran.

Recklessly adventurous rather than romantic, Ronald Coleman comes to the Carolina Theatre Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, in "The Unholy Garden," a special United Artists production by Samuel Goldwyn who was responsible for the recent success, "Palmy Days." For the first time in two years, Coleman is no longer the suave polished English gentleman. Instead, he is an outcast and renegade, hiding out with a dozen other refugees from the law in a strange outpost at the edge of the Sahara. Disheveled and unshaven, hair tousled and clothes mussed, he is a sharp contrast to the immaculately groomed hero of "The Devil To Pay," and "Bulldog Drummond."

Estelle Taylor and Fay Wray have the principal feminine roles. As the wanton voluptuary of the story, Miss Taylor has the biggest role since her memorable appearance in "Cimarron." Miss Wray is the protected daughter of the embezzling recluse, hiding at the inn. An extraordinary gathering of character players appear as "the family," the exiled criminals whose plottings and schemings give such animation to the story.

George Arliss, greatest character actor of the day, comes to the Carolina Theatre, Thursday and Friday (matinee Thursday) October 22nd and 23rd, in the screen version of his brilliantly successful stage play, "Alexander Hamilton." This is the second American Mr. Arliss has portrayed on the screen, his first being in "The Millionaire." While there is a vast difference between the self-made business man of "The Millionaire" and the stormy aristocrat, "Alexander Hamilton," Mr. Arliss makes both men forceful and living.
