Roaming Around

By Roamer

Joy ride the other day. Had to go up the road, but instead of taking Route 50 hit the Bethesda road, crossed at Southern Pines to the Pennsylvania avenue extension through Jimtown, and out the Pee Dee road by the airport, and then past Pad Kelly's house, Lakeview, Vass, down by Beaver Creek and up to Cameron. Interesting all the way, and through country that is telling the story of rural Moore county. Crossed the railroad at Cameron where the old mill stone factory used to be. Interesting genius, Quin Stutts, who used to run that shop. Philosopher, mechanic, knew how to build grist mills, and built them all over the country with native stone for the grinding hours, and made a name for the Cameron Millstone Company. Old mills have gone out of fashion like the rest of us old plunder. Liked to sit down and talk with Stutts. Reader and thinker. Lot of sense packed in that old head.

Over by the station hundreds of barrels of tar in the old days. Tar came in from all directions. Waiting there for shipment and for repacking. Sticky quarter there in the tar yard. All gone. Tar industry a memory.

Up the hill. McPherson, McKeithen, —old warehouse seems out of commission. Dewberries have shoved the old knitting mills to one side as an industry. The hotel that Britton built half way up the hill some years ago was a cheery country tavern, sought by many people for its wholesome provender and comfort. Rev. Malcolm McNeill still lives beside the road, his house the open door to many a kindly path toward the days that are ahead and the memories that are gone. John Phillips is no longer at the front door of his ancient store on top of the hill, but at the cotton gin in the yard are bales of clean white staple now as in the days when his was one of the chief centers of activity. Down the old road Charlie Jones is missed from the old knitting mill, which has grown up to weeds. Highway cuts across the upper end of Cameron and leaves the lower part on the roads to yesterday.

Went up the old road toward the Carthage road at Whitehill. Substantial farms and neighborhood history. Henry Matthews some years ago opened a community up that way. Brought many folks in from the mountain counties. Built nice house, mill, made good farm. Mountain folks planted tobacco, and other things. Henry bought too much land, and was left to hold the bag. Couldn't hold it. Added much to the neighborhood, but profited little himself. Did good job. Good folks he brought down. Good land, good farmers, posies along the door yards. Out the end of the road not far from the White Hill junction with the Carthage road Hugh McPherson has a fine pine forest that is worth going that far to drift about in. Second growth. Land years ago old farms. Now in fine pine woods about big enough for saw mill, which will get it some day. Hope it may be handled intelligently, for it is just in condition to be worth something as a lumber supply, but if cut under direction of some good forester it has a possibility of succeeding crops and of succeeding continued growth that will make it one of the most interesting spots along the road. Shows what pine trees will do in this section if they have a chance and are treated like white folks.

Good route for Struthers Burt to travel. Mighty few signs tacked to the trees along the way. Not so many cars in the way either.

Joy ride, but had a little business out that way. Joy ride because you go slow and poke along on the side roads, and life is worth while. Darn this modern habit of travel where you shoot in one end of a hard road and out at the other like a paper wad in a popgun. Country roads do not require you to be jerking the wheel all the time to keep from being run over by speed fiends, or to keep you from running over them, and you can fix in your memory the things you see to think of them afterward and appreciate them.

Democrats of South To Control the House

Thirty Important Committee Chairmanships Will Go to Southern Congressmen

organization of the House. Unless he goes, or unless the present line-up is changed by death, or other unexpected reasons, the next House of Representatives will be organized by the Democratic party, regardless of whether such a course is politically wise or unwise.

There are those in the party who contend that Democratic control of either branch of Congress would be regrettable. They point out that if the party should organize the House it would be by the narrowest possible margin and that by reason of the lack of a working majority the party would be unable to put over a constructive legislative program, thereby laying the party liable to criticism and to be charged by the Republican with inefficiency and failure. Others just as interested in the party welfare are of the opinion that Democratic control of the House would react to the good of the party throughout the country, that it would infuse new life and vigor into the party and would greatly encourage party workers. Certainly it would be a difficult undertaking to convince Representatives John Garner, of Texas, who would be the Democratic Speaker, or Joseph W. Byrns, of Tennessee, who is slated for floor-leader, to say nothing of the 47 members who would be elevated to committee chairmanships, that such a course would be a political mistake.

All agree, however, that if the Democrats possess the numerical strength to enable them to organize, justifiable criticism would result in their failure to accept the responsibility.

In the event of Democratic control of the House, at least 30, and perhaps more, of the committee chairmanships would go to members of Congress from the South. The North Carolina delegation would receive its fair share of these chairmanships.

The South in the Saddle

Edward W. Pou, of the 4th district, would become chairman of the powerful Rules committee, a post held by him with marked distinction and ability during the two Wilson administrations.

Lindsay C. Warren, of the 1st district, is the ranking Democrat on both the Library committee and the Committee on Accounts, and would become the chairman of the committee of his choice.

John H. Kerr, of the 2nd district, would be made chairman of the committee on Elections No. 3.

J. Bayard Clark, of the 6th district, might be elevated to the chairmanship of the Committee on Claims. Congressman Black, of New York, outranks him but is also the ranking Democrat on the Education committee. Should Mr. Black choose the chairmanship of the Committee on Education, as many think he might, Mr. Clark would become Chairman of the Committee on Claims.

In addition to these chairmanships the delegation would have in Robert L. Doughton, of the 8th district, a high ranking member of the very important Ways and Means committee, and in Charles L. Abernathy, of the 3rd district, an important member of the Committee on Merchant Marines and Fisheries.

The other four members of the delegation, Frank Hancock, of the 5th district, Walter Lambeth, of the 7th district, A. L. Bulwinkle, of the 9th district and Zebulon Weaver, of the 10th district, are now members but they would undoubtedly be given desirable and important committee assignments.

It is obvious, then, that the North Carolina delegation in the House would lose nothing by reason of Democratic control. On the contrary, the delegation would become quite a factor to be considered in the shaping and enactment of legislation and its members would be in far better position to effectively represent their constituencies.

On the whole the political situation in the national arena today closely parallels that which existed during Taft's administration and like it, may be the forerunner of a Democratic victory in 1932.

However that may be, the odds are about 100 to 1 that John Garner, of Texas, will be the Speaker of the next House of Representatives.

Pinehurst Paragraphs

On Tuesday evening the Woman's Auxiliary and a number of friends had the privilege of hearing Miss Rebecca Wilson, member of the faculty of Hongchow Christian College, Hongchow, China, in a most interesting informal talk on the phase of mission work in which she is engaged in that field.

Possessor of a charming personality and a service record of thirty-one years, Miss Wilson appealed to her large audience in an intensely personal way. At the close of the program a social hour was enjoyed, during which dainty refreshments were served by the committee on social activities, of which Mrs. Charles Fields is chairman.

It was announced that Miss Wilson would be the speaker at the 8:00 o'clock service on next Sunday evening in the Community church, to which all are invited.

The mid-week prayer service has been changed from Thursday until Wednesday evening at 7:30, beginning this week. The subject this week was "A Member of the Supreme Court Visits Jesus," John 3:10, with the Rev. W. M. McLeod leading the discussion. These meetings are very informal and afford a closer spiritual contact, perhaps, than any of the church services. Everyone is welcomed to the meetings and invited to take part in the discussions.
