CHOOSE SITES FOR NEW SANATORIUM BUILDING

Plans for the construction of North Carolina's proposed new tuberculosis sanatorium near Black Mountain are making satisfactory headway. It was learned following a visit to the site by State Senator Lee L. Gravely, who heads the joint board of directors of the projected plant and the one now in operation at Sanatorium.

Senator Gravely, a tobaccoist of Rocky Mount, made a visit to the site near Asheville and selected the exact locations of the proposed buildings. For this purpose he was accompanied by Dr. Thurman Kitchin, president of Wake Forest College, a member of the joint board of directors; Dr. P. P. McCain, head of the Sanatorium institution; William H. Deitrick, of Raleigh, architect for the new plant; and R. M. Rothgeb, a State engineer.
