THE FUTURE LOOKS BRIGHT

All in all, the season which is rapidly coming to a close has been a highly successful one. When one considers how many people came to the Sandhills resorts despite the inclement weather, and stayed on, the question looms large as to what kind of a winter we would have had with normal weather conditions. Which permits of optimistic thoughts for the future.

The most gratifying element in our continuing advance is the constantly increasing popularity of the section among horse owners. Each season is seeing more and more horses sent here for wintering, horses of the hunter and steeplechase type—the type which represents the sort of ownership desirable as winter residents in the Sandhills. The excellent hunting, the sandy soil which hardens up a horse, the fact that the whole countryside hereabouts is a bridle path laid out by Nature, and the offering of regular events such as gymkhanas, the Sandhills Steeplechase race meeting and the Pinehurst Horse Show, are responsible for this steady growth in horse population. And the coming of stables means the coming of owners and riders and grooms and spectators, gradually the building of new homes and estates.

Nor is golf showing any signs of losing its foothold. From the time the unwelcome and unaccustomed snow made its departure this winter the courses have been as popular as ever—the Pinehurst No. 2 course with its new greens more popular. Next season will see a second Pinehurst course similarly improved, possibly others.

Some building is in progress. A number of residences have changed hands during the season. Noel Laing, the country's leading trainer of steeplechase horses, has recently acquired considerable acreage near Southern Pines on which he proposes to build extensive stables before next fall. The new Midland Road course of the Sandhills Steeplechase & Racing Association is being improved at a cost of more than $1,000, the course to be entirely rooted in Bermuda grass before its next race meeting. Extensive improvements to the airport are being made to provide another means of access to the section—probably the eventual establishment of the field as a port-of-call on regularly scheduled routes of the big air liners. The future looks bright.

NOTH CA'LINEA IN NEW YORK

New York newspapers recently carried a full-page advertisement of R. H. Macy and Company, the largest department store in the city and perhaps in the world, featuring odd articles this store's buyers had picked up here and there in various parts of the United States.

Of particular interest to the people of this section was that part of the advertisement calling attention to pottery made in this state. Although the exact place where the scouts found and bought it was not revealed, it is more than likely that the advertisement referred to pottery made in this section.

Said the Macy Advertisement: "NOTH CA'LINEA . . . up in the hills . . . that's where we find this enchanting pottery, made by the natives It's crude in texture. No two shapes are alike because artists never turn things out in mass. The glazes are high. We have vases, bowls and baskets for your June roses. We have candlesticks, floor jars, pitchers and candleholders. Blue, green, rust, red, white and black."

North Carolina pottery, as pointed out by the Raeford

News-Journal, has become virtually a symbol of the state in the eyes of thousands of out-of-staters. It has formed the sub-magazine and newspaper articles. It has been greatly admired and commented upon by tourists from other sections, both those sojourning temporarily at North Carolina's famous resort towns and those passing through the state enroute north and south. And now it is being "pushed" by a great metropolitan business house.

Yet thousands of North Carolinians, living a figuratively stone's throw from the places where this pottery is made and sold, never pay any attention to it.

THE PILOT APOLOGIZES

The Pilot apologizes to any who, because of the announcement in its columns, attended the picnic of the All-States Association last Saturday for the purpose of hearing two of the state's gubernatorial candidates, Dr. Ralph McDonald and Gilliam Grissom. The association sponsoring the outing gave this newspaper definite assurance that the candidates would be present, and The Pilot announced the speeches accordingly. Neither candidate appeared; why, we do not know.

Possibly it is just as well Dr. McDonald and Mr. Grissom failed to put in appearances. There were so few in the assemblage they could but have assumed the people of Southern Pines were not interested in affairs of government.

Grains of Sand

Sam Richardson had a nice picnic lunch prepared for him and sent to the All-States Association outing last Saturday. He arrived at 1:00 o'clock, asked: "When do we eat?"

"Everyone ate at 12:00," he was informed.

"Where is my lunch?"

"Dunno. Everything that was left over was given away," he was informed.

Sam went downtown, bought his lunch.

Those who went to the picnic to hear the advertised speakers, Dr. Ralph McDonald, candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, and Gilliam Grissom, Republican nominee for Governor, didn't fare much better than Sam. They ate, yes; but they didn't hear any candidates. None appeared.

Here are a few paragraphs from Sanford' colored newspaper, The Enterprise:

Easter Monday was quietly in our community. We were not bothered with drunks.

Quite a number passed on their way to the river today to fish.

Saturday night, as usual, had plenty of drunks and fight. How long will these this exist.

It was rumored on the streets that a woman was found in three different places with her throat cut. It could not be verified.

Easter Monday was generally observed here.

A photo shop in Southern Pines has been displaying a picture of a recent prominent guest of the Highland Pines Inn, with the following title:

"Homer S. Cummings, District Attorney General."

Apparently the United States Attorney General has been demoted.

Fools Gold

A New Book by an Anonymous Southern Pines Author

Many books have appeared in recent months which have tended to dispel parts of the fog which has enveloped the policies of the present administration at Washington, but it remains for "Fools Gold" by "The Senator from Alaska" (Madison & Marshall, Inc., New York City) to furnish the first piercing ray of sunshine to illuminate all the wiggings and turnings of those now in the governmental saddle. It is a crystal clear account of the steps by which those in power have followed a well thought-out plan to gain control of the government machinery, and what they propose to do with it—and us. The book is of particular interest locally due to the fact that the author, who prefers to remain anonymous, is a winter resident of Southern Pines. "Fools Gold" is a carefully documented book which traces the philosophy of the New Deal from its inception, its introduction into the United States more than seventy years ago, and its gradual expansion to its present position of importance. It gives dates, names and places, and what happened there. It shows the background and histories of men now in Washington who were responsible for the successful "capture" of the Democratic party in 1932 which they used as a vehicle upon which to ride into power.

The author, using the non-existent title of "The Senator from Alaska," is one of the outstanding authorities on subversive movements in the United States. He has been battling this influence for nearly a half century. He speaks from personal contact with some of those now active in putting over New Dealism.

"Fools Gold" gives a brief account of how a little group of skilled alien Marxist propagandists of the "intellectuals" brand, driven from Germany because of their subversive activities, came to the United States about the middle of the '60s of the last century with a very definite plan ultimately to gain political control of this nation. The plan involved boring from within organizations to capture or destroy them. When captured, such organizations were to be used as subsidiaries to the socialist movement. Where they could not be captured, then destroyed, at least, in so far as their effectiveness as opponents was concerned.

This system was first applied to labor unions. Later it was extended to farmers' organizations. Still later, called "permeating," it was extended to college groups, and still later, termed "penetrating," to every kind and charter or organization, society and club, not excluding religious groups. By this system the fallacious theory—then called socialism, now called New Dealism—gained many ardent followers. In 1916 this boring from within was officially extended to political parties and openly termed "stealing." The first move—and successful—along this line was in North Dakota where the Republican party was "stolen" by the socialists operating under the deceptive title of the Nonpartisan League.

Being careful to differentiate between organized socialists, those holding membership in the Socialist or Communist party and those who have accepted the theory and who style themselves either Democrats or Republicans, the author turns to the Progressive (Socialist) party in 1924. He calls attention to the fact that the men and women then supporting the socialist theory with the late Senator Robert M. LaFollette as their candidate for president, now hold important positions under a so-called Democratic administration. The author shows how, through the use of the primaries, this group was able to control a sufficient number of delegates in the 1932 Democratic convention to secure the nomination of their candidate, the present incumbent of the White House.

"Fools Gold" is an attack upon the Democratic party; indeed, that party per se is absolved of any responsibility for the present situation at Washington; it is, on the contrary, an expose of the forces which have deliberately, and with malice aforethought, "stolen" that party. It is not an attack upon the President, but is an expose of the fallacious theories which he has supported. It is not an attack upon members of the brain trust but an expose of the system which has been employed that makes them brain trusters. It is not an attack upon the New Deal but an expose of the philosophy upon which New Dealism is based and the system employed to popularize that philosophy in the United States. "Fools Gold" contains nine appendices all of which are filled with factual information of marked interest to every adherent to constitutional government, and to every person in this country who believes that we can not advance through systematized reckless expenditure of public money. "Fools Gold" will be of special interest to all American citizens who, during the past three years in the face of bitter opposition, have had the temerity to voice their honest convictions regarding what was taking place at Washington for, by the presentation of well documented evidence, it sustains their position.

TRIBUTE TO G. P. HARDISON IS ADOPTED BY LIBRARY

Members of the Board of Trustees of the Southern Pines Library Association, at their meeting on Tuesday, adopted the following tribute to the memory of their late fellow member:

"It has been said that human beings can roughly be classified as "lifters" and "leaners"—those whose help can be counted upon in any worthwhile civic enterprise, and those who merely look on while others do the work. As citizen and as library trustee George P. Hardison was a lifter. He applied his business experience effectively to the problem of raising the standard of library service. A lover and discriminating judge of fine literature, he was happy in the opportunity to assist in furthering the beneficent influence of the library. "Library trustees come and go. The library goes on meeting its problems and serving the community as best it may. But when a rare spirit like George Hardison, yielding to the common fate after a valiant fight, relinquishes his trusteeship there is a keen sense of personal loss. The familiar voice and figure are gone leaving only a treasured memory—the memory of a well loved friend and co-worker, loyal to a cause faithfully and gladly served."
