STRUTHERS BURT SPEAKS FOR OLD SLAVE DAY

(Continued from page 1) be. Everything they do is gracious, dignified, and in good taste. They sit around under the trees in a pleasant park, they listen to music, they talk to each other, and to white people who are interested in them. At noon an excellent lunch is served them. In the afternoon an address or two is made by negro leaders of the county. And that is all that happens to the ex-slaves. They are very proud of their historical significance, and if I were a negro with the same history, I would be proud, too. If the editor of the Norfolk Blade recollects, among the justifications for decent pride are being interesting, being significant, and being worthy citizens. Old age in itself is also a justification.

As for the authenticity of these venerable negroes, that is vouched for by the men who knew them, and these are honest men. There are about ninety ex-slaves in that section of Moore county in which

Southern Pines is situated, and they range in age from seventy-two to one hundred and four. Last year a splendid old negro, Deems Taylor, died at the age of a hundred and eight. The deductions of the editor of the Norfolk Blade are based upon hasty mathematics and an apparent ignorance of statistics. There are thousands of people in the United States over seventy-two years of age; thousands more in their eighties and nineties, and even several thousand over a hundred. The editor of the Norfolk Blade even seems to overlook the fact that there are still numerous veterans of the Civil War walking about, and a man would have to be considerably older to have served in the War Between the States than to have been born under slavery.

No Commercialization

As for the "degrading" spectacle of crap playing, that is not indulged in by ex-slaves, although possibly some of them might like to join in. Whatever "performances" of that kind take place are indulged in by young negroes, and are intended largely for the amusement of their elders. Crap playing, either by whites or negroes is an amusing spectacle, the last word without quotation marks. Some day when the editor of the Norfolk Blade has time off from his serious duty of writing misinformed, and misinforming, editorials, he might devote an hour or so looking into this. His use of terms in this respect are as badly chosen as his use of the term "commercial uses." It might interest him to know that there is no admission charged to these "spectacles" and that there is no "commercial use" or gain, of any kind.

If there were not some sort of complexes in the minds of these various editors in regard to negroes and slavery-complexes too intricate to go into here, although they are quite obvious—it might be worthwhile to invite them down to Southern Pines next spring. They might then investigate this dreadful occasion for themselves and if they were still unconvinced, start a crusade or something. Meanwhile, they had better start a crusade about chain gangs, prison camps, and Justices of the Peace. But that, of course, takes nerve.

Scores Pay Tribute to Mrs. Measamer

Beloved Jonesboro Resident, nee Bernice Currie of Jackson Springs, is Laid to Rest

Funeral services for Mrs. Floyd Measamer, 29, of Jonesboro, held at Lemon Springs Methodist Church on May 11, were attended by one of the largest crowds ever present at a funeral in that section. Many were unable to get into the church.

The services included a Scripture reading and prayer by the Rev. F. Ervin Hyde, pastor of Sanford Christian Church, a brief eulogy by the Rev. R. G. Matheson, pastor of Jackson Springs Presbyterian Church, of which Mrs. Measamer was a member, and a Scripture reading and prayer by the Rev. J. W. Bradley, of the Jonesboro Methodist Church. The numerous floral offerings were in charge of members of the Jonesboro school faculty and other close friends of the deceased. Active pall bearers were L. D. McNeill, Clyde Baker, and Harold Kelly, of Jonesboro, A. J. Northcutt, of Sanford, Leonard McCaskill and W. L. Currie of Jackson Springs. The honorary pall bearers were Judge Clawson Williams, Dr. A. A. James, Warren R. Williams, Dr. F. L. Knight, and Dr. Waylon Blue.

Mrs. Measamer was before her marriage Miss Bernice Currie, of Jackson Springs, and was for a number of years a valued member of the Jonesboro school faculty. She was a woman of the highest type of Christian character and was honored and loved by a large circle of friends. Mrs. Measamer was stricken suddenly a few days before her death and never regained consciousness.

The funeral was attended by her immediate family from Jackson Springs as well as friends and relatives from Carthage, Pinehurst, West End and other parts of the state. She leaves a husband, mother and several brothers and sisters.
