FOR THE STATE LEGISLATURE

A close election appears in sight tomorrow in the only Moore county contest in the run-off primary. W. R. Clegg, of Carthage, who represented the county in the last State Legislature, but who ran second to J. Hawley Poole of West End in the June primary, is making a second bid to go back to Raleigh.

The Pilot was well pleased with the result of the first primary in this contest for the Democratic nomination. Hawley Poole is one of the successful younger men of the community.

He ably managed one of the Sandhills largest peach orchards, the Manice Orchard; he has made a success of his own farming enterprises; he has shown marked ability in civic affairs, a keen interest in all things looking toward the betterment of his community and his county. This is his first venture in politics, and as the type of man more of whom we should have in governmental affairs it seemed to The Pilot the electorate was to be congratulated on its choice a month ago.

In an advertising card Mr. Clegg says: "Don't Experiment. We do not feel that it will be in the nature of an experiment to send Mr. Poole to the Legislature. Based upon past records, we believe that he would prove more representative of the good folks of Moore county in the legislative halls at Raleigh than his adversary."

THE LURE OF THE CHURCH

A general complaint is heard that the church has lost its hold on the people. To a certain extent this is true, while on the other hand the church has a remarkable hold on the people. That fact was demonstrated last week at historic old Long Street. The North Carolina society of Colonial Dames unveiled a boulder commemorating the founding of Long Street church in 1756, last Wednesday. To that little ceremony were drawn people from over the state. Not very many from any place, a few from Moore county, Raleigh, Fayetteville, Lumberton, Dunn and elsewhere. The old church drew them back. When they made the journey they knew they would encounter nothing else along the road, no two-fold purpose in the trip. The church was the sole attraction—standing in government territory, an uninhabited country, isolated ranger stations are its only neighbors. Which ever direction the pilgrim hailed from, the road led through a wilderness only, no relatives to visit, no old neighbors to drop in on. Young people and old folks came, men and women prominent in outside affairs, whose ancestors had worshipped at Long Street.

Man probably never constructed anything that he put any more dignity into than some of our early churches. Long Street stands grave and impressive. The building is painted white with green shutters. Steps lead up to the high porch. White columns support its roof. No stained windows, no mosaics, no tapestries expressing the theme of religion. Yet the holy old edifice stark in its severe simplicity, brought something of the faith. The fatherly and gentle leader was a powerful factor in the building of those little kingdoms.

A hundred and eighty years of such influence through succeeding generations did something to the human roots of the people. And that something is not easily destroyed. Bonds that were years in developing are apt to hold something of their

GRAINS OF SAND

Portland, Oregon, offers a bounty of a hundred dollars for careless drivers. If we would declare an open season on reckless drivers we might make highway conditions safer for sane drivers.

A scientist now says life may be restored by an electric current. A person shocked back to life might not care to die again. Returning with sparks flying would make you dubious as to where you were in the interim.

A great crop of seeds are now coming up not to mention a prolific crop of weeds and grass seed. Gardeners planted early in the middle of April before the dry weather came along, then after the drought was established, and then again following the rains. The result is about three different sowings and in some cases not always the same seed. The mixture is amusing and affords a variety to choose from.

The berry season for the Sandhills is a prolonged and lengthy one. The strawberry arrives in the early spring. Dewberries and Young berries make their appearance and now the wild blackberries are ripening in quantity with the big blue huckleberry of the swamp a companion. For about two months our supply is plentiful and table and pantry shelves benefit.

If our Grains of Sand had come up then for classification wonder where they would have put us. Back under the Devonian Sands perhaps to stay?

From the late Jim Johnson's threnody of Long Street.

"Here lie some thirty dead unknown,
Who wore and gloried in the Gray,
Even they've forgot what's past and gone,
Feel no resentment in this day.
For Khaki, Blue and Gray clad men,
Are comrades all, for aye, again."

Our neighbors in khaki, absorbed the two colors. The army protects the sanctuary and its silent hamlet.
