

Gov. Hoey Endorses Cancer Control Week

Urges Support of Educational Campaign of Women's Field Army

Governor Clyde R. Hoey this week gave his hearty endorsement to the annual educational and enlistment campaign of the Women's Field Army in a statement made public by Mrs. D. S. Coltrane, State commander. Governor Hoey said:

"The month of April has been designated by Presidential and Congressional authorization as Cancer Control Month for the entire United States and the General Assembly of North Carolina has joined the national authorities in authorizing the observance of this month by the people of North Carolina.

"I am directing the attention of the public to the importance of this campaign for the discovery, treatment and cure of cancer. The whole medical authority unite in advising that most of the cases of cancer are curable if discovered in time and therefore that an early examination for cancer and prompt attention given to the danger signals apparent constitute the best possible protection against this plague.

"The whole field force of public health are engaged in directing the public mind to the danger of cancer infection and to the imperative need for early attention and treatment when any of the symptoms are discovered. I join heartily in emphasizing the fine work which the Women's Field Army has been accomplishing and I call upon all the people of this State to give support to the campaign and to assist in raising the funds to carry on this educational program for the general protection of the whole public. Since cancer ranks second among diseases as the destroyer of human life and since this disease has steadily increased its toll in recent years, it is of utmost importance that we give full assistance to the women in this educational campaign which will be conducted throughout the month of April."
