

Grey Ladies Provide Helpful Service to Hospital Patients at Camp Mackall

The 36 Moore and Richmond County Grey Ladies, distinguished by the grey cotton uniform with matching veil and white coronet which they wear on duty at Camp Mackall, are members of the Hospital and Recreation Corps of the American Red Cross. Their insignia are Red Cross emblems and the pin of the corps they represent. They must serve a minimum of fifty hours a year, but in time of war this would be more difficult to keep down than to attain. Some of the Grey Ladies in Moore County serve as many as eighteen hours per week.

Grey Lady training prepares them to provide friendly and helpful diversion, recreational and benevolent service for sick and convalescent patients. The service is an important addition to any military hospital program, answering a need so apparent that its function, organization and policies have been coordinated with military authorities through Services of the Armed Forces. The first course of its kind was arranged by officials of Walter Reed Hospital in collaboration with The American National Red Cross for recreational care of hospitalized veterans and service men.

Careful selection and special training at Camp Mackall Hospital have prepared the Moore and Richmond County class for competent service in that institution. Its activities are regulated by a secretary stationed in the Red Cross building, a section of the hospital unit.

Five areas of service are open to the Grey Ladies at Camp Mackall. They staff the information desk in the hall of the Red Cross building. Here a Grey Lady perched on a stool surrounded by a high counter answers questions, gives out games, writing paper, musical instruments and model planes, and wraps packages, or even sews on insignia upon request. Inside the counter are shelves which contain every type of game from anagrams to chess. Here a lonely boy may borrow a guitar and strum away his loneliness and that of his buddies, or build a small model of the plane in which he hopes to fly again soon. Boys loiter at the desk not only to ask questions but to talk—just talk to pass the time pleasantly.

Grey Ladies work in the library of the lounge under the supervision of an Army librarian and wheel the library cart through the wards recommending books for bed patients. They aid in sorting, cataloging and mending books and magazines and act as hostesses while the librarian visits the wards. The library at Camp Mackall increases daily its variety of timely and entertaining books which are given constant use by the patients. This is a busy area of service.

"The 'Rec Hall,' as the recreation auditorium at Red Cross headquarters is called, is a large, cheerful room with a stage where movies, amateur and professional shows, concerts, lectures and entertainments are given for the patients. During the day Grey Ladies instruct and play games here with the up patients. Here they have a craft shop where handicrafts are taught and hobbies, such as stamp collecting and photography, are encouraged.

Grey Ladies visit surgical and medical wards every day, Monday through Friday. They teach games and handicrafts to bed patients, stimulate an interest in hobbies, do errands, write letters, act as guides for visitors, and assist in decorating wards and recreation rooms for special occasions, such as Halloween, Christmas and Fourth of July.

These volunteer workers report to the ward kitchens at noon to supervise the preparation and arrangement of and help in the distribution of lunch trays. They see that patients get well-balanced and attractively prepared meals. Likewise they assist in serving patients on special diets and special meal schedules.

Grey Ladies find their working hours filled with useful and satisfying helpfulness. The patients need and appreciate their service. Mrs. G. H. Whittall of Southern Pines, is their chairman, and Mrs. Ed Horn, of Pinehurst, their vice-chairman.
