Saturday Dance

Badminton, tennis and horse-shoe pitching are also in constant progress, with dancing and "just getting together" probably the favorite occupations of all. The 15-years-up group are invited to a dance at the Civic club Saturday night, starting at 9 o'clock and ending before midnight. All ages enjoyed an "open house" held under Miss Aline Todd's chaperonage Wednesday evening, at which an extra special attraction was featured—a boxing exhibition by Richard Patch and Fred Arnette on the tennis courts across the street.

The summer program, which is sponsored by the Council of Social Agencies, will continue through August 23.

IN HEALTH WORK

Miss Nancy Boyd, of Southern Pines, is spending her vacation from Radcliffe college as a volunteer worker with the county health department. She is assisting Mrs. Worth McLeod, maternal welfare worker, with clinics and other work of her department.

service, and said it made two clear-cut impressions upon him. He was struck as never before by a feeling of satisfaction: "What a wonderful place North Carolina is!" he said. "What a wonderful place to live!" And, companion to that thought came the strong conviction that his state was entering a new era. "It is a time," he said, "for new ideas and for new leadership toward new goals."

Three-Way Citizens

"Citizens of North Carolina," the speaker said, "must be three-way citizens", and he went on to describe the three choices which lay before them. He said that, first, there was the state itself, which for fifty years has made much progress but which still lags in the essentials, notably in health, education and per capita income. He urged vigorous political action. "We must have political participation and assumption of responsibility," he said. "If we want progress we must be ready to work for it politically."

The candidate pointed to the low registration and voting figures and said political control was in the hands of a few with only about a quarter of the people voting. While he stated that in his belief the state had enjoyed good government for many years at the hands of the organized political party, "today's machines," he said, "have outlived their leaders. As they have become more heavily organized the calibre of leadership has declined. It is time to go outside the machine and seek new leadership."

Second item on his list of three was politics at the national level. He described the United States as the envy and hope of the world, but said a close view showed many deficiencies with economic conflicts and insecurity as basic weaknesses. He asked his hearers if they wanted to go on with the "boom and bust" life of the twenties or whether they would back vigorous political leadership to correct present needs in the country and strengthen the underlying structure of our society.

International Aspect

Finally, Albright turned to the international picture. While the United Nations is doing as much as it can, he said, it was clear how helpless it was to cope with actual issues. He believed it would have to be changed and strengthened, given a body of law, a legislature and police force before the menace of war could be abolished.

He said we have the choice: an armaments race, with more than a third of our taxes going into preparedness for war, with no guarantee that other nations will not soon have the atomic bomb and make all our preparedness useless; we have that or its alternative: to transform the UN into a world government.

The speaker started his hearers as he coupled the United States with the Soviet Union as the two obstacles to world government. "With the world looking to us for leadership and hope, our country has not yet taken the step of coming out in favor of world government." But he then went on to tell of the resolution to be presented to Congress by a group of outstanding leaders asking the president to propose such a step as soon as possible, and said he felt this was a notable step forward.

The speakers' words were listened to with great interest by the group of veterans, many of whom had seen war at its worst. "Their intent faces and the eager questions asked the speaker at his close testified to the great impression he had made."

As A Candidate

Questioned as to his candidacy for the governorship, Albright described himself as an independent Democrat. He said his platform, among other things, advocated doing away with the gag rule in the legislature, complete recording of all votes taken, and concentration on important state issues. He said that fully two thirds of the legislators' time was now occupied in considering purely local matters and advocated turning these back for community action.

Old timers present professed great admiration for the candidate but shook their heads over his chances. "He's too honest, too sincere, too frank," one said. "A man who doesn't pull his punches and who says what he really thinks won't get far in state politics," was the general verdict. "But you've got to wish him luck, just the same. It would be a great thing for the state if more young men like Albright went into politics."

Besides acting as executive secretary to World Federalists Inc. Albright has headed the state's employment service for several years.

Albright attended State college, Raleigh, and the University of North Carolina, where he took his A. B. in American history and government, his M. A. in political science and his Doctor of Jurisprudence degree at the law school. He was student body president, a member of Phi Beta Kappa and held other offices of distinction. As a World War 2 officer he was a member of the first Allied military mission to Italy and served as liaison officer between the Allied Military government and the government of occupied Italy. He served in North Africa, Sicily, Italy and Trieste with the American Fifth and British Eighth armies.

He was an organizer and member of the first national executive committee of the Young Democratic Clubs of America, and served as chairman of the Sixth district of the YDC of North Carolina. He helped organize the GI Democrats and served as their state secretary until March of this year.

During the 1947 General Assembly he conducted a series of daily round table discussions of senators, representatives and state officials, broadcast over a 10-station network from WRAL, Raleigh.

He is a director of the North Carolina Conference for Social Service and the Raleigh Housing Authority, and formerly served as a director of the state commission for the blind; is membership chairman for the North Carolina department, American Legion; and is a member of the North Carolina and American Bar association, the North Carolina State Legislative council, the North Carolina Council of Housing Authorities and the North Carolina Conference of Christians and Jews.

POLIO PRECAUTIONS

avoid chills—don't stay too long in cold water;; keep clean—wash hands before eating, keep flies and other insects away from food; help keep your community clean and free of waste and exposed garbage; don't swim in polluted waters; avoid removal of tonsils or adenoids during the danger months.

Foundation Service

If polio strikes, Chairman Butler reminds, your local Foundation chapter is at your service, and at the service of the community. Hospitalization, transportation of patients, care and treatment are provided when needed the year around; "iron lungs," orthopedic appliances and other special equipment may be supplied; physicians, nurses and other trained personnel are sent where they are needed.

The Infantine Paralysis Foundation, which also finances research into the causes, treatment and prevention of polio, is supported through public subscription during the annual March of Dimes.

cating him from the wreckage. Also assisting were passengers from the bus which had halted to render aid.

The injured man, who was bleeding profusely, was placed in the Burns automobile and driven to the hospital, first stopping, at his own insistence, in Aberdeen to notify Fletcher Cochrane. Cochrane immediately sent down for Mrs. Stewart who was at home in Pinebluff and met her husband at the hospital.

Here examination disclosed a fractured hip and several crushed ribs and severe lacerations.

Moon, the driver of the other car, and his companion, Miss Doris Garner, were treated by Dr. Bowen at his office. Moon was severely cut on the forehead and Miss Garner was treated for sprains of the wrist and ankle.

To questioners, Moon stated that he could remember nothing of the accident, and action to be taken by those involved is not yet known. It has been stated by Patrolman Swain that no charges would be preferred by either party.

Though Stewart's condition is said at the hospital to be still serious, he is reported to be gaining steadily, with signs of shock subsiding.

MRS SHAW BETTER

Mrs. Hoyt Shaw, of East Connecticut avenue, who suffered a broken hip two weeks ago in a fall at her summer home at Mt. Carroll, Ill., is reported this week to be greatly improved. She will, however, have to remain in the hospital for several months.

She is a patient at the Savannah hospital at Savannah, Ill.
