Turkey Production Sets New Record

There should be no shortages of turkeys for the tables of North Carolinians on the Thanksgiving holiday that will soon be rolling around, for an August survey of turkey producers in North Carolina, disclosed that production of turkeys in the State this year will total 1,010,000 birds, according to the State-Federal Crop Reporting service. This is the first season of record that the number of turkeys raised in North Carolina has reached a million birds.

The past two years have shown rather sharp gains in turkey production in North Carolina. The introduction of Beltsville White turkeys for market as fryers and broilers on a near year-round basis has accounted for much of the gain.

For the nation, reports indicate that a record crop of 58,956,000 turkeys is being raised this year.

While the milk production business in North Carolina is increasing, in June of this year, 1,427,377 pounds of milk were imported to meet the State demand.
