Hillendale Range Is Credit To Sandhills Golf Setup

With the Grand Old Sport of Golf breaking out all over the place, the latest spectacular explosion has occurred out on the Midland Road where Tom O'Neil has built a driving range in line with the finest traditions of this golf center.

Hillendale is the newest of three driving ranges with which the immediate area is now endowed. Earliest was Parhaven, located farther along the Midland road, which has maintained its popularity since it was first opened by Leo and Estha Walper in February 1948. Second came the Hole-in-One, opened a year ago on US 1 south and now managed by Pro Johnny Mahoney. Each differs interestingly from the others, and all are tops—confirming the proud fact that the Sandhills is the undisputed golf center of the land.

With eight Sandhills golf courses flourishing through the years, there seems every reason to feel that three golf ranges will do the same.

The Hillendale Golf Range is located to the south of the double road beyond the WEBB radio tower. Twelve acres of pineland have been cleared and planted, to form a rolling expanse of green, wide enough and handsome enough to cause any passing golfer to put the brakes on and swing into the handy parking space without more ado.

When he does, he will see on the left the snug little clubhouse a miniature affair, with its handy office, where the great bin of balls stands, all ready to be used, and the paved lounging terrace, sheltered from the sun by its peaked roof and awnings. The latter can even be dropped to close in the sides in chilly weather.

Here the visitor will find the owner, Tom O'Neil, and his wife who was Eleanor Barron Knight and a former president of the Pine Dodgers, Southern Pines women's golf association. The O'Neils do the honors of their new project and are cordial and interested whether the visitor wants to practice or simply sit under one of the gaily-colored umbrellas that are dotted about, and watch.

One of the most interesting features of the range is the high driving ramp. From here, some 13 feet up in the air, a sweeping view of the whole layout may be obtained, guaranteed, it would seem to inspire the crack player to sweat them out with a will. What's more, the non-crack player may for once, share in the elation of seeing his ball go out of sight. (Even if it just bumps hatefully down below at least it's gone!) and if it should start to rain there's no turning up the collar and trudging gloomily along; you just pick up your ball, go down under the ramp and keep right on playing.

The new driving range has another unique point: the O'Neils have built what they call a "Kiddie Corral" where a baby-sitter is expected to be on duty to look after the youngest fry while Ma and Pa are out there practicing.

Young fry, in fact, are to be given consideration at Hillendale—Pro Bill Train, who loves to teach children, is making special efforts to make things attractive to school-age youngsters.

Starting last week regular Thursday lessons for pupils of the local school will be held under his direction, starting with the 7 and 8 graders, girls from 3 to 4 p. m., and boys from 4 to 5. Students from the High School will take the field on Tuesdays. Enrollment is being handled by school athletic coaches, Brown and Leonard. With 34 pupils already lined up it looks as if this feature of the new range would prove very popular. Mr. O'Neil emphasizes that other schools and non-school children will, of course, also be welcome.

The Hillendale Range is open from early morning through the evening. Powerful lights permit accurate shooting at night as well as by day. There is a 90-yard water hole, over a nice little pool down at one end of the range, 140 yard and 250 yard holes, and even a sand-trap, if you are in the mood to exercise your temper as well as your muscles.
