

Holly Is Tree of Happy Traditions; Cut Carefully, or Destroy It Forever

Man has noted the beauty of the National Wildlife Federation, as evidenced in songs, poems and folktales.

American holly is much like the European species. It grows in moist, sunny places from east Texas to New Jersey, and north along the coast to Cape Cod, Massachusetts.

The holly is the state tree of Delaware. It is protected by law in several states.

The public can help most in protection of this fine tree, says the National Wildlife Federation, by seeing that all boughs offered for sale were legitimately harvested.

Hunt Season Opens Thanksgiving Day With Lively Meet

A drag hunt that started in the woods back of Joréna Lodge and finished in the dogwood pasture on the Harold Collins place marked the opening run of the Moore County Hounds, on Thanksgiving Day.

Holiday visitors afoot and a-horse crowded the pinewoods near the O'Neal lodge and stables. Cars were parked among the trees, ready to start off behind the lead car, the station wagon of joint master William J. Brewster, to follow along the road and watch the hunt.

Following a line that crisscrossed the country on both sides of Youngs road, part of it over the hunter trial course, hounds ran with a good cry. Checks were short and the pack showed, according to the huntsman, "good trailing and drive."

A hunt breakfast took place, following the drag, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dwight Winkelman. The pack was given another test the following Monday when a by-day was added to the schedule.

Seafood Market Opens For Season

The Sandhills Seafood Market has reopened for the season, on the corner of West Pennsylvania avenue and Bennett street. W. F. Bowman is the proprietor, and this year he is being assisted in the operation of the market by Carl Klabbatz.

The market carries all kinds of seafood, brought daily from the coast by refrigerated transportation. Besides the usual fare from the deep it offers a number of delicacies, and of course, those fine big shrimp, oysters and a special treat—live Maine lobster.

Psywar Seminar Set Next Week

At Fort Bragg

Representatives from all Army service schools in the continental United States will meet at Fort Bragg next Wednesday through Friday for a seminar on psychological warfare.

The three-day seminar, to be held under the direction of the Psychological Warfare school, has been planned to coordinate the instruction in the various service schools on psychological warfare operations.

The Psychological Warfare school is one of the activities of the Psychological Warfare Center. The center was established earlier this year by the Department of the Army to coordinate and consolidate the Army's psychological warfare program in one central location.

In the three-day period the representatives will receive a concentrated course in psychological warfare activities. They will also observe organic psychological warfare units in operation during their visit to the 6th Radio Broadcasting and Leaflet Group, commanded by Lieut. Col. Lester L. Holmes.

The Psychological Warfare school, the only one of its type in the nation's armed services, was designed by the Department of the Army to train selected officers and enlisted men of the Army in military propaganda, public opinion, and in the many other aspects of psychological warfare operations. Officers of the other armed services also attend the school. Col. Gordon Singles, assistant commandant of the school, is in direct charge of the school.
