Kent Exhibit Called 'Real Art' By Visitors At Gallery Show

The current exhibit of the work of Whitney Kent brings the Library Gallery back on center again after the past four weeks spent exclusively in the realm of the abstract.

Mrs. Kent's talent, however, well representational, cannot be put in the conventional class. For variety of technique and mood this exhibit stands by itself combining as it does examples of oil, watercolor, lithograph, landscapes, portraits, still-lives, and a style that ranges from the purely decorative to impressionism and a striking Grant-Wood-like portrait.

Without doubt, it is the lithographs, portrait-drawings of four Arab men, that stand out as the most impressive work in this collection. They show a high degree of professional excellence, as well as the keen understanding of human nature that make them live.

Indicative that her years in Afghanistan, when her husband was on duty there, were well-spent artistic, is the charming series of watercolors. Composition is one of this artist's strong points, and sense of rhythm. The Arab towns, mounting steplike against a backdrop of the Hindu Kush mountains; the houses like square white blocks, with the zigzag of brown earth walls following the alleysways, make a pattern, rigid, and well-defined, yet with a subtle flowing rhythm. But not even this good painter can convey the awful heights of the great wall of ice and snow that towers in the background.

Among the larger canvasses, the flat pattern of the dancing male figures, with their alternating blacks and whites, contrasts sharply with the impressionistic treatment of the seated Turkish girl, in her brightly colored draperies.

Mrs. Kent should be a good teacher for she appears at home in many moods and mediums. And she has the qualifications of study at Pratt Institute and George Washington University, followed by several years of teaching in the latter and at her own school of art in Evanston, Ill. She has worked as a commercial artist and is the winner of several awards. Her work has been hung in numerous exhibits. This is the second of her shows here.

In the notebook for the remarks of gallery visitors, comments on the current show have been highly favorable. Here are three:

"The Kent show is highly decorative, expressive, full of flavor and savor. Her painting communicates a feeling of life and vigor."

"Thoroughly enjoyable."

"Remarkable draftsmanship; excellent command of technique, especially lithography."

"Real art."

February 27 is the closing date of this exhibit. —LEONARDO

Valentine Day Horse Show Held At Vernon Valley Farm Draws Interest

By E. O. Hippus

Though they didn't get any ribbons at the Cardy horse show on Sunday, the stars of the afternoon were clearly recognized in the two dark beauties, newly acquired by Vernon Valley Farm, from the racing stables of the Aga Khan.

Blanketed and banded to the knees, Kerbe and Nemrod II were led into the ring towards the close of the afternoon. There they were stripped and revealed to an admiring gallery in all their symmetry and grace. And if they made the fine thoroughbreds standing around look a good deal like cart-horses that was only to be expected.

For these new Cardy acquisitions come of blood lines that stretch way back in thoroughbred racing and breeding history. That they will stretch as far forward, continuing the record of wins on the flat and for the purse, which their ancestors have built up is the hope of their new owner, fully justified, it would seem, by the looks of his two new youngsters.

Kerbe and Nemrod II, as an nounced by ringmaster, Nick Crotty, will, as soon as they have become thoroughly acclimated, be placed in training under Mickey Walsh of Stonebrook Stables. Young Folks Out

Youngsters, both human and equine, were the order of the day at Sunday's gymkhana. The show itself was given a Valentine's Day circus-celebration air by the gay colors, reflected in Cardy costumes, in the flags flying and the many children taking part. The sunny hillside was alive with ponies and youngsters charging about or swarming under foot, in dire peril of falling off or being troampled on.

In the ring, Corbett Alexander marshalled his troops, the younger fry of Pinehurst, who more or less cleaned up on the local boys and girls. Doreen Narelle, Nancy Lou Gouger, Billy Fitzgibbon and Mary Anne Wright were among Pinehurst children winning ribbons, while in the Costume class, Lucy Simpson, as an Indian, won the prize for the funniest entry, Doreen and Mary Ann, as a Southern lady and gentleman, starred as the most original, and the Fitzgibbon pair, Sandra and Billy, in an Alice in Wonderland get-up, were acclaimed the prettiest entry.

But though she didn't, according to the judges, rate a ribbon, the humor that went up the one the crowd picked for their pet Valentine of the day. This was none other than Baby Phoebe Eileen, sitting up on Mrs. Doyle's Hush Puppy pony, led by her proud older sister, Joan. This was the last Walsh's first appearance in the show ring and, by the look of her, her sisters are going to have to look to their laurels from now on. And did we say "the last Walsh". A rash prophecy, if we ever heard one.

Top riding honor in the older children's class went to Louise Coker of Hartsville, S. C. Joanne

Goodwin was second, with Maureen Walsh, on her handsome, frisking, hump-in-his-back four-year-old, third, a ruling that might have been reversed, we'd say, had the riders been required to change horses. Margot Campbell, doing well on a strong-moving mount, won in the younger division; Russell Williams was second, Mary Ann Carter, third, and Diana Pearson, fourth.

A near casualty of the afternoon was Billy Doyle who had quite a fall when his roan pony, Hush Puppy, out of control and careening around the ring at top speed, misjudged an easy fence and came a cropper. Billy had the wind knocked out of him but, luckily, nothing more serious.

Schooling Show For Oldsters
In the adult section of the schooling show, Lakelawn Farm and Stonebrook Stables shared most of the ribbons. Cappy Winkelman, giving his King Louis a lovely ride, won several of the jumping classes while the Walsh girls put on their usual winning rounds. Another fine performance was that of Ginny Moss riding her chestnut youngster, Reward. This was Reward's first appearance in a show ring and he behaved like an old hand. If he goes on as well through the season, the spring show should find him a strong contender for green hunter honors. Battlewings was another Mileaway Stables young one who showed up well. The week's brooding over his lackadaisical, hit-or-miss performance in the Collins ring the Sunday before, had apparently given him new ideas about show ring jumping. He made an excellent round in the Cardy ring.

With Mrs. Vernon G. Cardy, chairmanning the show, Nick Crotty announcing and a strong quartet of Alexander, Goodwin, Adams and Moss in the ring, the Cardy Valentine's Day show ran off in great style. Old Man Weather may have given an assist, too, with the sunshine and spring-like air of a perfect Sandhills day. Not to mention Host Vernon Cardy, who made everybody feel at home and welcome.
