Local Talent To Be Featured In Vass 'Talent Show'

Sponsored by the Vass volunteer fire department, a "television talent hunt show" will be held at Vass-Lakeview high school Friday, April 23, starting at 8 p.m., it was announced this week.

Featuring Arthur Smith and the Cracker-Jacks, television, radio and recording performers from Charlotte, the variety show will choose the best of local talent acts to appear on an Arthur Smith television show from Charlotte the following week.

Applications from groups or individuals in this area who wish to compete on the April 23 show are now being received by Chief P. T. Smith of the Vass fire department. Applicants will be screened and 10 of the performers or acts will appear at Vass with audience applause deciding the popularity winner, the grand winner to appear on the Charlotte television show.

The Smith group will present a variety show, in addition to the local performers.

CERF TO SPEAK

Bennett Cerf will be presented at Flora Macdonald college, Red Springs, on Tuesday evening, April 6 at 8:15, as the last number and only lecturer on the 1953-54 artist series. A versatile personality, he is famous as a writer, editor, lecturer, a regular panel member of the popular television series, "What's My Line," and founder of the famed publishing company, Random House. His "Cerf-Board" and "Trade Winds" are well known syndicated columns, and his daily feature, "Try and Stop Me," is also widely syndicated.

WHITE COLLAR BOOST

American industry is spending considerable more money on office staffing and equipment today than in 1920. This is because of a realization that good records and statistics, prompt communications, and other office work is as important to production as machine work in the plant.

WOODELL SPEECH

over $20,000 per minute for defense.

Atomic war could destroy our civilization and perhaps life itself. There is no effective military defense against atomic attack. It has been estimated that we would be fortunate to knock down 40 per cent of planes attacking with atomic bombs, before they delivered their bombs on target.

History is full of examples of insane attacks; thus being prepared for war does not necessarily prevent being attacked.

Could the United Nations be given additional powers so that it could prevent aggression and preparation for aggression, both Communist and other?

Yes, if all powerful nations agreed.

Changes Recommended
Here are some changes that have been recommended by outstanding "builders of peace."

1—An agreement by all nations to disarm, by progressive stages checked by international inspection in all weapons and armed forces down to agreed amounts to maintain internal order.

2—Changes in the United Nations Charter giving the U. N. power, now lacking, to enforce the disarmament agreement on individual violators and prohibited weapons. The vital enforcement of law on individual violators is successful everywhere. Enforcement on nations, the only method the U. N. has now, is war, the very thing we want to avoid.

3—Changes in the United Nations Charter to provide a veto-free executive. The Security Council should be shorn of veto in matters of aggression and preparation for aggression, and the executive made responsible for administering and enforcing disarmament.

4—An agreement allowing the United Nations dependable sources of money to carry out the disarmament program.

At present the U. N. can only ask the nations to contribute funds which they may or may not do.

The United Nations is now going through probably its most difficult period. When the United Nations was launched at San Francisco, it embodied the hopes of many people throughout the world. These hopes were perhaps exaggerated, as are those of parents planning the future of their new born son or daughter. Many people thought the United Nations would be able to solve all international problems right off and none of us would have to carry this burden after that. The United Nations is a place where nations can meet together and whatever is done has to be done by them and other nations that make up the membership of the United Nations.

I would like to close with this thought so often quoted from President Lincoln's second Inaugural Address.

"With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in—to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and a lasting peace, among ourselves, and with all nations."
