

When fertilizer is applied in a vegetable garden as deep as the soil is spaded or plowed, it encourages plant roots to develop well below the surface where greater moisture can be obtained. This method is particularly effective for commercial fertilizers.

UNC Students At Work On Survey Report Of Town

Graduate students from the University of North Carolina's Department of City and Regional Planning spent last week completing their land use survey here.

The survey extends and brings up to date another made by UNC students in 1951. It is part of the training course of the students and costs the town only the amount of their actual expenses, not in any case to exceed $500.

Information and technical advice on future expansion of the town, population trends, zoning and the proposed new route of No. 1 highway through Southern Pines are expected to come from the survey.

During the survey, the students looked over the by-pass route and the "way the town fits into the landscape" and drove over nearly all streets of the town with Town Manager Tom E. Cunningham and Bill Wilson, building inspector, plotting on a map the location of business, residential and public buildings. The survey extends out from town about a mile.

The students are Miss Ruth L. Mace of Chapel Hill, Arthur H. Fawcett, Jr., of Annapolis, Md., Alan D. Goodwin of Rose Hill, Pa., and William R. Rugg of Massachusetts.

Next month, Cunningham, Wilson and possibly other town officials will go to Chapel Hill to hear a report by the students. It is expected the report will be printed later and will be available locally.

A new chemical, Panagen, is recommended this year for the first time in North Carolina for oak smut and barley stripe. In tests, the new treatment gave complete control. Two other chemicals now recommended also give complete control.
