

KEEPS LAWNS GREEN

Most established lawns in the eastern portion of this state are of Bermuda grass, crabgrass, Dallas grass, bluegrass or a mixture of these and others. All except bluegrass will turn brown at the first hard frost. With the mild winters over most of the state it is very desirable to keep lawns green the year around. This is made possible by sowing Italian ryegrass in the established sod during late September or early October. If permanent sod is heavy it may require five pounds of ryegrass seed per 1,000 square feet of lawn. If the sod is not heavy, two to three pounds per 1,000 square feet should be sufficient.

Cub Scouts Look For New Members;
To Meet Friday

The Men's Club of Southern Pines Methodist Church heard Dr. J. S. Hiatt, Sr., of Elkin, at the monthly supper meeting of the club at Highland Lodge Sunday night.

A retired Methodist minister, Dr. Hiatt is the father of Dr. J. S. Hiatt, Jr., of Southern Pines. Noted for his humor, he delivered an amusing and inspiring talk to the club.

Members arranged to meet Saturday at the site where ground was broken recently for the new Methodist church, to prepare for building an outdoor furnace as part of the recreational facilities of the church.

The supper was prepared and served by members of the Women's Society of Christian Service.

AUTUMN FOLIAGE

Wherever you go during October in the Blue Ridge and Great Smokies, autumn coloring is in evidence as it begins on slopes and peaks of 5,000 feet or more and spreads downward to cross the Piedmont around the end of the month. Because of abundant rainfall during the past few months, this year's color parade is expected to be of unusual brilliance. The peak of the color season along the Blue Ridge Parkway and in the Great Smoky Mountains National Park occurs during the middle two weeks of October.
