Mrs. Ives Addresses Statesville Democrats At Rally Monday Night

Mrs. Ernest Ives told a political rally in Statesville Monday night that the Democratic campaign is "going superbly."

Earlier, Mrs. Ives, interviewed by an Associated Press reporter in Charlotte prior to a speech she delivered in the high school in Statesville, said that the stand taken by Adlai Stevenson on hydrogen bomb testing was "the greatest thing he has done in the campaign." In taking the stand, she said, Mr. Stevenson "has stood on principle and this is where he's proven himself a great statesman."

She referred to Statesville as "our home." It was there, she pointed out, that "grandfather Stevenson campaigned in 1892." The grandfather she referred to was an earlier Adlai Stevenson, vice-president under Grover Cleveland.

She told the Statesville rally that the Democrats had put the Republicans on the defensive.

"The tempo has been terrific and it's paid off . . . the President can't take it sitting down in front of a television camera." After four years of the present administration, she said, her brother is "eager . . . a new Adlai."

There still has been no definite indication whether Mrs. Ives would return to Southern Pines prior to the election.
