Itinerant, 80, Is Town's Only Drunk
On New Year's Eve

James Channon, 80, was the only person arrested in Southern Pines New Year's Eve for being drunk. And Channon, an itinerant from "some place up North," said he wasn't really drunk—just under the effect of a prescription.

At a hearing before Justice of the Peace Lloyd T. Clark Tuesday, Channon was ordered to spend 30 days on the roads or leave town.

The elderly man, who police said had also cursed some people in the railroad station earlier in the day was arrested about 7:30 Monday night. He told the officers that "a woman doctor" had examined him and given him a prescription to drink wine at times.

He has been visiting this area for a number of years. Officers said they understood he spent much of his time at the race tracks near Pinehurst.
