"Let us humbly confess..."

There's the story of the man who felt the urge to go to church and just dropped in to the first one he came to. It was an Episcopal Church, and when he walked in, he found the entire congregation kneeling and saying together, "We have left undone those things which we ought to have done and we have done those things which we ought not to have done."

To himself he said, "I guess this is where I belong," and he knelt in the rear pew with the rest of the congregation.

That is only a story, but it illustrates the fact that every Sunday Episcopalians kneel together to orally confess their sins to Almighty God. "Let us humbly confess..." is part of the phrase used by the priest in inviting members of the congregation to join in confessing our sins. We feel that this is just as much a part of church as hymns, prayer and the sermon.

In the Episcopal Church, the mighty and humble kneel together to confess their sins and ask God's help for future strength. This is the spirit of democracy which has made the Anglican Communion the common meeting ground for 45,000,000 persons the world over.

Why don't you join with us? When you go to the Episcopal Church you feel like you've "really been in church."
