Forsyth County Attorney Speaks To Jr. Woman's Club
"Protective Custody of Children" was the topic of an interesting and informative talk heard by the Junior Woman's Club, meeting Tuesday night at the Church of Wide Fellowship.
Mrs. Austin Sauls, chairman of the club's department of Welfare and Youth, was in charge of the program and presented the speaker, Nat S. Crews of Winston-Salem.
Mr. Crews is attorney for Forsyth County, a former member of the North Carolina General Assembly and a former judge of Forsyth County Juvenile Court.
One of the greatest problems facing North Carolina today, the speaker declared, is that of teenagers in prison. The present prison population of 11,600, he said, includes a large percentage of 17- and 18-year-olds. Two-thirds of the total have served time previously. He described as the most shocking thing he had seen the treatment and sentencing of youthful offenders as adults.
Mr. Crews cited the fact that in 92 of the state's counties, the Clerk of Superior Court—politically elected person with many other duties and not necessarily trained in working with juveniles—presides over the Juvenile Court, in which persons up to 16 years of age are tried.
He discussed the recommendation of himself and others that detention homes for groups of four or five counties be established, also that jurisdiction be extended to 18 years. North Carolina is one of only five states that have 16 as the age instead of older, he pointed out.
North Carolina has made great progress in many ways—highways, labor reforms, and others—now it is time to turn attention to the young, where the greatest responsibility lies, he declared.
A question and answer period followed. "How can a club such as this help?" was asked. The answer: by keeping in contact with its representatives and senators and keeping them conscious of the need.
Mrs. Stanley Austin presided over the business session, with the uppermost business being in regard to plans for the State Federation meeting in Pinehurst next week, for which District 9 will serve as hostess. Members were urged to make a special effort to attend on Junior Day, which will be Wednesday. Attention was called to District Junior Day to be held at Fayetteville May 30 in the Woman's Club building.
Mrs. Calvin Howell, Fine Arts and Crafts chairman, had on display a collection of Jugtown pottery.
Hostesses for the meeting, Mrs. Danny Sheffield, Mrs. Fred Teeter, Mrs. W. M. Booker and Mrs. W. L. Scarborough, served cookies and Coke from a table centered with blush pink roses.

St. Joseph's Guild Hears Guest Speakers, Installs Officers

Awards of merit were presented to 23 volunteers for various hours of service, and identification bracelets were given to five teenagers called "volunteers."
The Rev. Mr. Mangum, after an inspiring address, installed the following officers and members of the executive committee for the two-year term 1959-61: Mrs. Kennedy, president; Mrs. William J. Wilson, first vice president; Mrs. Donald S. Denoff, second vice president; Mrs. M. K. Lausten, recording secretary; Mrs. Lennox Forsyth, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Jerry Healy, treasurer; Mrs. Walter Davenport, Mrs. Philip Randolph, Sr., and Mrs. Francis L.
