

General Assembly Report

By H. CLIFTON BLUE

Adjournment

As this column is being written Tuesday night, it appears uncertain as to whether the General Assembly can adjourn and call it quits this week. The House debated the important bill which would submit the State Constitution to the people for major changes with the Court Reform proposals being the most outstanding. Since the House had not finished the bill at the close of the day, the certainty of adjournment by Saturday was not too bright.

Judge Farrell

Judge J. Garland Farrell of the Aberdeen Recorder's Court spent most of the day Tuesday in the House listening to the debate on the Constitution and Court Reform proposals.

Senate Page

For the past several weeks Bernard Dotson, son of the Rev. and Mrs. Dotson of Carthage, has been serving as a page in the Senate under the sponsorship of Senator Currie.

Calendar Committee

A calendar committee was appointed last Friday to pass upon all bills introduced from that date on out instead of the bills going to the several committees as heretofore. This is customary when the time comes to wind up an Assembly session.

Poultry Inspection

A couple of weeks ago I discussed in this column the need for compulsory inspection of poultry at the processing plants in the state. I said that June Brewer and Harry Simpler of Robbins had discussed with Senator Currie and me the need for this type legislation. Senator Currie and I discussed the matter with legislative and agricultural leaders and it was the definite feeling of most everyone that it was too late to attempt anything this session for to pass a bill of this import requires hearings and considerable time which we did not have with the Assembly nearing the end of its work.

Public Or Private Nuisance? Legal Eagles Strain To Prove The Point

Defense counsel's nice distinctions between a "public nuisance" and a "private nuisance" were capped by Solicitor W. Lamont Brown's definition from the same book of Supreme Court opinions as to a "disorderly house" to bring about a conviction for John Newton, operator of "J. C.'s Grill," at Moore Recorders court Monday.

E. F. Simpson and E. N. Scott, who live near the cafe at the intersection of US 15 501 and NC 27, one mile east of Carthage, as complaining witnesses in the case testified to late-night activities at the grill, bold and roistering language and jukebox music blared forth by a loudspeaker into the night, which they said greatly disturbed their home life and prevented their sleep.

Defense attorney W. D. Sabiston, while admitting that "if these things are true" they should have redress, claimed this redress should be in the civil court. They did not constitute a "public nuisance," affecting the great body of the public, but a "private nuisance" affecting only a few, he declared; and that in operation of a legitimate business Newton did not stand in violation of anyone's constitutional rights.

Solicitor Brown, however, read the supreme court opinion that a "disorderly house" was "a store in which people collect and disturb the neighborhood," and that the pertinent statute rendered the maintaining of such a criminal offense.

In this Judge J. Vance Rowe concurred, finding Newton guilty of maintaining such an establishment, though not guilty of public nuisance.

He handed Newton a 60-day sentence suspended for 12 months on condition he put a stop to the disturbing practices, such as "broadcasting jukebox music or other programs from loudspeakers attached to the outside of the building, or permitting loud, boisterous and offensive language or other conduct on the outside of the building such as to disturb and annoy the neighborhood." Notice was given of intent to appeal and bond was set at $250.
