Turtle-Terrapin? Water Super Pools Pilot Terminology

The Pilot has been taken to task for an article last week which dealt with the large number of turtles in the town lake.

Ralph Mills, water superintendent and the man who probably knows the lake better than anyone else vehemently denied the story. "Turtles, smurtles," he said. "There's not a single one in that water and I'm quite prepared to prove it."

What's really there, he contends, is terrapins. "Millions of 'em," he mumbled. "Millions."

The editors of Webster's International Dictionary, Second Revised edition, give a very fancy definition of both turtles and terrapins, the meat of which is: terrapins ARE turtles, though turtles ain't necessarily terrapins. Terrapins. Humph.
