EXPENSES RISE

The State's total gross farm income of 1,177.6 million dollars last year was about 73 million dollars short of 1958 but not much different from average for the ten preceding years. However, production expenses continued to increase, the 671.5 million dollar total for 1959 being the highest of record and consuming 57 percent of gross income. In each of the years 1949 to 1956, inclusive, production expenses represented less than one-half the gross income. During the past three years, these expenses have taken somewhat more than 50 percent of the gross.

NORTH CAROLINA MEANS BETTER LIVING

Long known for its good and abundant sea foods, North Carolina is fast becoming an important beef-producing area as well—a fact welcomed by tourists who prefer beefsteak to fish steak. This year, North Carolina farmers will raise more than a half million head of beef cattle, an increase of nearly 200% over the number raised just ten years ago.

Increasing, too, are the numbers of enlightened areas throughout the state that endorse the "legal control" laws governing the sale of beer and ale—another fact welcomed by many North Carolina visitors.
