

Cole Employing Handicapped At Electric Shop

Floyd Cole of West End trains and employs only handicapped workers in his electric motor rewinding and repair shop.

Handicapped himself by the loss of a leg in a tractor accident shortly before World War II, Cole trains men, both white and Negro, sent to him by the North Carolina Rehabilitation organization. These men, in his opinion, are more efficient than any others. He has even trained a man with only one hand in the delicate art of rewinding motors. Cole says that this man is a genius. Many of his trainees have gone on to other shops or are now proprietors of their own shops.

During the war, Cole worked at an Air Force base in Mobile, Ala., on electrical aircraft work. When the war was over, under the state and national rehabilitation program, he was sent to Memphis, Tenn., for six months, for more electric motor training. Finally he was ready to open his shop on the Pinehurst-West End road.

The shop handles repairing, rewinding and an electric motor sales and service. It also makes fans to sell to the poultry industry. Today chickens are grown so fast and in such abundance that their houses at times are very crowded. The fans keep smothering at a minimum, he explains.

Cole and his workers get up and go at any time of day or night if there is a serious motor breakdown anywhere.

Cole has a West End Boy Scout Troop of 20 boys which he took on a camporee two weeks ago for the weekend. He is also an assistant superintendent of the Sunday School at the Beulah Hill Church. He is married to the former Lavigne Curry of West End and they have two sons, Mac, 14, and David, 8.

This year Cole is entering politics. He is one of the Republican candidates for the office of county commissioner.

About 50 million acres of American land need planting, and millions more acres are not stocked to full capacity. Too many acres lie idle after timber cutting while the owner waits for natural re-seeding. Such acres should be planted soon after logging.
