3 Boys Arrested At Carthage, 2 Aged 15, One 13

Three young boys, two of them already on the waiting list to be sent to Jackson Training school, were caught Sunday morning when they climbed in a window of the county school garage at Carthage.

W. E. Bailey, maintenance supervisor, happened to be inside repairing a car when the two 15-year-olds and one 13-year-old made their illegal entry. He turned them over to local officers and all were placed in the hands of the juvenile judge, Clerk of Court C. C. Kennedy.

Chief Deputy H. H. Grimm said the two older boys were among seven haled into court last week charged with temporary larceny of two cars from a used car lot, or with aiding and abetting. Two of the seven, who were 16, drew probationary terms while the others were remanded to juvenile court.

Grimm said he planned to question the boys concerning a break-in of the food concession stand at the Carthage school gym last Thursday night, when large quantities of edible items were taken by intruders who then picnicked untidily nearby. Dozens of cartons of milk and ice cream sandwiches, peanut-butter crackers, potato chips and other consumables were carried to the edge of the woods about 100 yards away, and what wasn't eaten was left strewn around in what the deputy described as "a filthy mess."

The sheriff's department co-operated with Carthage police in both cases, and Police Chief Landis Hussey said he asked the 13-year-old boy involved in the county garage break-in if he knew anything about the food theft. The boy answered "No" but added, "If I did know I wouldn't tell you."
