Bath, England Visits Bath, N.C.

Said Mrs. Edward Pryor of Bath, England: "When I hear people speaking with an American accent on the Royal Crescent in Bath where I live, I introduce myself to them and invite them to my house. I think it is so worthwhile getting to know each other in this way."

Mrs. Pryor has been here a few days with Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Ives—"Such hospitality!" she said. "I enjoyed every moment of my visit at Paint Hill Farm"—and she is today at Raleigh, where she is to speak to the assembled gathering of members and guests of the North Carolina Society for the Preservation of Antiquities. From there she will go to Washington and New York, returning next week to England.

The British woman's visit to this country came about through an invitation she received from the Historic Bath Commission of North Carolina, to attend the group's annual meeting at Bath held on November 1. By coincidence, Mrs. Pryor lives in one of the lovely eighteenth century houses for which Bath, England, is famous, houses that have much in common with some of the houses now in process of restoration at the Carolina Bath, several of which were also built in 1750 and '60. She is, of course, intensely interested in the restoration of the namesake town.

Following her visit to the seacoast town, Mrs. Pryor toured Virginia, visiting Mt. Vernon and other great houses of the South. As a member of the Bath Commission for the Restoration of Bath Abbey, which suffered heavily from bombing during the war, Mrs. Pryor spoke of contributions made by Americans to this cause and of her satisfaction in the many evidences of friendship she said she found everywhere on her travels here.

"People are so very friendly," she said. "They go out of their way to make you feel at home and to be cordial." The British visitor also praised the small wayside restaurants where, she said, she had "had good food in clean and attractive surroundings."

During her tour, Mrs. Pryor spoke to several groups of the English-Speaking Union, notably in Washington, D. C., and Montgomery, Ala.

WILDLIFE SANCTUARY

The 25,000-acre Mount Mitchell Wildlife Management Area, extending high up on Mount Mitchell's western slopes, supports a large deer herd and offers bear hunting supervised by the North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission in cooperation with the U. S. Forest Service. Mount Mitchell, like all other North Carolina State parks, is a wildlife sanctuary closed to hunting year around. Bear, deer and small red squirrels and groundhogs are found here around, as are juncos, ruffed grouse and the common raven. Songbirds frequent the park in summer.
