

Some Looks At Books

By LOCKIE PARKER

MY LADY SUFFOLK: A portrait of Catherine Willoughby, Duchess of Suffolk by Evelyn Reid (Knopf $5.00). This biography of a lady of the sixteenth century is clearly a labor of love. Mrs. Reid had helped her husband, Conyers Reid, the Tudor historian, in his research and became much interested in Catherine Willoughby whom she admired for her charm and wit and even more for devotion to truth when she saw it. Born a Catholic, she became a Protestant when it was dangerous to be one.

and the wardship came into the hands of the Duke of Suffolk. When Catherine was fifteen, the Duke married his ward, and this seems to have been a happy marriage despite the difference in ages—the duke was forty-eight. After his death she married an English gentleman, Richard Bertie, who proved a devoted husband, sympathetic with her religious views and sharing her exile when they were forced to flee England during the reign of Mary Tudor.

But Catherine Willoughby was not only well loved by her husband and children. She was a lifelong friend of William Cecil, the trusted adviser of Queen Elizabeth for forty years; she earned the respect and affection of Hugh Latimer who dedicated a volume of sermons to "her valiant spirit," and she had a warm place in the hearts of the country people on her estates in whose physical and spiritual welfare she took the keenest interest.

Her story has been well told by Evelyn Reid with an appreciative background of the Lincolnshire country and unusual details of the domestic economy of a great house in the sixteenth century.

Burns, The Book of Patriotic Holidays by Marguerite Ickis, Book for Senior Golfers by Paul Runyan, The Silent People by Walter Macken, The scenes from Greville's memoirs, 1814-1860 by Charles C. F. Greville.

The World Almanac and Book of Facts, Conquistadors in North American History by Paul Horan, The Moon-spinners by Mary Stewart, Honey and Salt by Carl Sandburg, The Barons and the General by Louise H. Tharp, I Take This Land by Richard P. Powell, Madame Castel's Lodger by Frances P. Keyes, The Pyramid Climbers by Vance Packard, Dear Papa by Thyra F. Bjorn, Raise High the Roof Beam, Carpenters, and Seymour by J. D. Salinger, Credos and Curios by James Thurber.

The D. I. by Jeffrey Ashford, The Body at Madman's Bend by Arthur W. Upfield, Serpent's Delight by Ruth Perk, What Time's the Next Swan? by Walter Slezak, Tangara's Godchild by Claf Ruhen, Washington Cover-up by Clark R. Mollenhoff, Five Spy Novels by Howard Haycraft, The Boy in the Pool: a novel by Camilla R. Bittle, The Small Mine by Menna Gallie, The Case of the Mischievous Doll by Erle Stanley Gardner, A Girl in Winter by Philip Larkin, Night of Shadows by Frances Lockridge.

Find the Woman by Doris M. Disney, Call for the Dead by John Le Carre, The Street Where the Heart Lies by Ludwig Bemelmans, Roosevelt and Howe by Alfred E. Rollins, The Queens and the Hive by Dame Edith Sitwell, Voyage In, Voyage Out by Jean Rikhoff, North Carolina Charters and Constitutions 1578-1698 by Mattie E. Parker, Illustrated Home Handyman Encyclopedia and Guide, Popular Mechanics, The Surgeon by W. C. Heinz, Wyoming Summer by Mary O'Hara.

Current Biography Year Book 1962, Dead Weight: a mystery novel by Ruth Fenisong, North Carolina Lives: The Tar Heel Who's Who 1962, The Cape Cod Lighter by John O'Hara, Gideon's Ride by J. J. Marrie, That Spanish Woman by F. W. Kenyon, The Tall Woman by Wilma Dykeman, 1918, The Last Act by Barrie Pitt.

ert manages to go through several fortunes, and finally leaves France for England to start his life over, is a fascinating story. How the crystal goblet is finally restored to Robert's grandson is a story within itself.

That the author speaks with authority on the subject of glass-blowing is revealed in the introduction where she dedicated her book to her own forebears who were master glass-blowers.

In a day when anything from hot dogs to china is mass produced, this story of men who were proud of their craft and workmanship and worked for years as apprentices before they were given the title of master glass blower is a refreshing change from the usual novel of today.

The story of the French Revolution is told through the eyes of the ordinary working class of France and is somewhat different from what I remember in the history books. Although there will never be another "Rebecca," it is one of the best historical novels I have read.

Dr. J. V. Early to Preach Sunday At Lenten Service

Dr. J. V. Early, the minister of the First Methodist Church of Rockingham, will be the preacher for the fourth in the series of Sunday evening Lenten services at the Southern Pines Methodist Church on March 24, at 7:30.

A graduate of Asbury College, he received an honorary D. D. from that college in 1956. He has served as the pastor of churches at Hillsboro, Yanceyville, Dunn, and Smithfield and at Grace Methodist Church of Wilmington. He is serving his third year as pastor of the First Methodist Church of Rockingham.

In the North Carolina Conference, Dr. Early has been on the Board of Evangelism, the World Service and Finance Commission and the Board of Ministerial Training and Qualifications.

Special music will be provided by the church choir. There will be a nursery for pre-school children. The public is invited.

N.C.A. LEADER

In history North Carolina has been a leader. This was the site of the first English colony in the New World and here Virginia Dare was born, the first child born of English parents in America. North Carolina was the first colony to vote for independence from England and the first to establish a state university. In 1903, near Kitty Hawk, the Wright brothers opened a new age when they made the first flights in a self-propelled aircraft.

Critics Crushed

Lesson for March 24, 1963

Bible Material: Mark 12:13-24
Devotional Reading: John 12:44-50

YOU can always tell how a man's mind works by getting him into some kind of corner. It may be a physical corner, such as being caught in a burning building, or it may be a mental corner, when some public and extreme personal persona is being grilled by a "Meet the Press" panel. So it is not only interesting but exciting to study the short story of the clash Jesus had with his tireless critics during His

Dr. Foreman last earthly hours. His critics, as is well known, were smart men. They belonged to the intellectual classes, they had what we would call a high education, some were trained in the art of debate. For reasons which may be mentioned later, they were determined to crush Jesus, and they would stop at nothing. But while they had a set of plan in reserve by which to crush Jesus legally murdered, they did not try that at first. What they wanted was to show him up before the crowds, as an ignorant, confused, wrong-headed man. They hoped to get him laughed at, and that would finish him.

Three questions in a row were thrown at Jesus, in the hope of "smoking him out." First question: Is it right to pay taxes to the Roman government (Caesar)? This was a hot question. If He said Yes, all the 100% patriots would be after him at once. For Judea was an occupied country. Jews loved the government by Rome no better than Hungarians love Russian troops. But if Jesus said No, then the Romans would have him in jail before dark.

Second question: If a woman has had seven husbands, in the next world which of the seven is going to be her husband? The object of that question was not for information. The object was to show how ridiculous the whole idea of a future life is. From their point of view, the Sadducees who asked this question thought they had a sure-fire way to hold both Jesus and the Pharisees (their enemies) up to ridicule.

Third question: Which is the greatest commandment? (Meaning which of the Ten Commandments, no doubt.) Whatever Jesus said about this, He would run into people who had other ideas, and have endless arguments on His hands.

The reader is referred to his Bible (Mark 12, the Bible Material) to see exactly what Jesus said to each of these questions. We here observe the how of His answers. The first question He answered by calling attention, dramatically too, to something they hadn't thought of: these professional patriots owed something to Caesar. The government they hated had made business possible by coining money, had made life safe by their military police, had made travel possible by building roads. And then Jesus calls their attention to something else they hadn't thought of: What about their debt to God? The second question He showed was meaningless; no one would ask it who knew as much about heaven as Jesus knew. The question assumed that the next life would be just like this one, with wives—and perhaps groceries, medicine and gossip! Jesus never tripped fully to describe the next life; He made it clear that it could not be described. As for the last question, He answered it in such a way as to attract a thoughtful, serious man, and do him good.

Why the critics?

So Jesus crushed His critics, in different ways. But why did He have critics at all? For the same reasons that He resisted today. Some men are too proud to bow to the Carpenter of Galilee. Some men do not want to believe what they cannot first understand. Some perhaps in their hearts would like to believe and follow Him, but they are afraid of what might be said about them if they turned Christians. (What did the Sanhedrin think of the one or two men who stood up for Jesus?) Some hang back because they know, as the Sadducees did, that if they take up with Jesus they will have to ditch their prejudices and traditions.

Spring Tennis Contest Begins Here Next Week

A spring vacation ladder tournament is scheduled for play on the clay courts at the Pinehurst Country Club, according to tennis pro Joe Roddey, who noted this week that the event will be open to men, women and young people and there will be prizes awarded to winner, runner-up and "most improved" in each category. The tournament, beginning Tuesday, March 26, will end on the following Sunday, March 31. Interested contestants should go by the tennis house or call 294-7813.

Blood pressure may go up with exertion or excitement. Ordinarily such changes are normal. This does not mean "high blood pressure" is present. Only the doctor can tell when a person has high blood pressure, according to the North Carolina Heart Association.
