Strange Kingdom
Lesson for January 3, 1965

Background Scripture: Matthew 2.
Devotional Reading: Isaiah 40:1-11.
HAVE YOU EVER heard so much about a person you have never met, that it almost seems that you have met personally, after all? Let's suppose you have a friend — call him Bill — who in turn has a friend named John. In the course of a year or two Bill has told you so many stories about John that you feel you know him. You know how he acts; you can guess what Dr. Foreman is an emergency; you may think so well of him that you want nothing better than to arrange to meet him. And yet Bill has never given you the whole story of John's life. What he has given you are living glimpses into the character of a real man.

The New Testament gospels are like that. Strictly speaking, the gospels do not give us the story of Jesus' life. What they do is to give us a number of short stories about him, a number of remarks he made. They tell us so much — every bit of it revealing — that we feel we know the vital facts about Jesus.

Occupied country

Each of the four gospels puts together a different set of stories and reminiscences of Jesus; and each mosaic comes out a different (but not contradictory!) picture. The portrait in Matthew comes out showing Jesus, a child born "across the tracks" so to speak, a young man earning his living for years as a carpenter, being all the time a King. This was astonishing, and it would have astonished you, too, if you had been there. Jesus lived in what would nowadays be called an occupied country or territory — occupied by the military of a foreign nation, that is, Rome and the Romans were everywhere. Now the Romans had one Caesar and that was enough. (In future years that was not enough, but that's another story.) The point is that every Jew in the place ground his teeth every time he thought of the hated Romans and their insolent soldiers. The question is, how could Jesus or any one else claim to be a King without getting entangled with the Romans?

Great expectations
There were two reasons in particular why Jesus did not immediately get pounced on by the watchful Roman security police. One was that he did not at first lay claim to a throne, and when people called him Messiah (which meant something like King-Elect) he would vigorously hush them up. Another reason was that he lacked the things most pretenders to a throne would be expected to have, such as an army and a squadron of diplomats. But the real reason why it was so long before the Romans took notice of him was that he turned out to be so different, and his kingdom so different from the king and the kingdom the people were looking for, that his own people, the Jews themselves, did not recognize him.

Reality
What they got, or what they were offered, was something, Some One, far better than their greatest expectations; a King who would not only be the legal heir to David's throne — which Jesus was — but one to whom "all authority in heaven and earth" had been given. They expected a Kingdom, right away, in which every evil which torments man would be destroyed, and right maintained by force. What they got, or what they were offered, was a kingdom of the heart, — a realm that might have to wait centuries to be fully established, yet one which could begin now — and does exist in the hearts of faithful people everywhere. The news of this kingdom is never expressed as a second-best, or as a disappointment; it is always good news, — for that is what "Gospel" means. It is the best news there is. The kingdom of Christ is as near to you as your next prayer; it is as powerful as the Spirit of God.

uated to England makes a heroic story of fortitude and suffering, of great cruelties and great kindnesses. It should impress anyone with the madness of war as a solution for any problem.

States. Noel and his wife remained in Hungary. But still, although the press clamored for the full story, no official explanation was made by either side.
In this book Flora Lewis tells the whole story for the first time. To get the truth required detective work worthy of Sherlock Holmes. Years after the fact, Americans and communists were still afraid to talk, for reasons that slowly became clear to her as she followed up each lead, however remote, in Boston, Washington, New York and all the countries of Europe where Noel Field had lived and operated.
Flora Lewis is the wife of the New York Times foreign editor, Sydney Gruson, and has been a foreign correspondent since 1945. Her stories from both sides of the Iron Curtain won the Overseas Press Club award for the best reporting on foreign affairs in 1956, and her reports from Western Europe won the award for the best interpretation in 1962.

THE ORDWAYS by William Humphrey (Alfred A. Knopf $5.95). About two years ago, William Humphrey published his first novel, "Home from the Hill," which received praise from the critics and found a considerable circle of appreciative readers.
The author of the novel received a Grant in Literature from the National Institute of Arts and Letters and was able to take his time about a second book. Now he has produced a full-bodied regional novel and family chronicle. Written with quiet humor and affection, with sensitive probing into what shapes the character of individuals and communities, we get a fascinating account of four generations of the Ordway clan that had migrated to East Texas shortly after the Civil War.

Clan spirit was strong with the Ordways. The book begins appropriately enough with the annual gathering to tend the graves of the ancestors, "Graveyard Working Day." There were a lot of graves; for old Thomas Ordway, when he migrated from the mountains of East Tennessee, brought along the ashes and tombstones of his dead kin. On Graveyard Working Day their stories were told again along with comments on those who had died in the new land and on Thomas himself whose memory still haunted the town.

The time is the early 1930's and the place Clarksville, Texas, which lay "on the edge of the blackland prairie. . . the first clearing they (the Southerners) came to out of the canebrakes and towering pines." It was as though they had stopped there appalled by the unfamiliar look of the great plains, "the flat and featureless immensity spread before them." Three generations later, this symbolizes their cultural heritage, too, a place where two myths met, those of the South and those of the West.

The characters, varied and vigorous, show this heritage of Southern pride and Western audacity in talk and action as William Humphrey develops the plot of this rich and readable book.
CANARY YELLOW by Elizabeth Cadell (William Morrow $3.95). Mrs. Cadell has a delightful way of making the most extraordinary things happen to the most ordinary people. In this case, Elaine Tracy, wearing of a five-year engagement in which she and her fiance were always saving to get enough to marry, blows her savings on new clothes, and a trip to the Canary Islands. It works. Soon she has two men competing for her attention on shipboard, makes some other interesting acquaintances, gets mixed up in a murder mystery and winds up with a rich and handsome husband.

If the author stretches coincidence and our credulity at times, it does not matter because this is obviously a grown-up fairy tale. The conversation sparkles, the background is lovely and even the villain is far from repulsive.
THE LONG ESCAPE by Irving Werstein (Scribner $3.50). This is a story of war written for a new generation of young people who did not live through those days. To people of forty and up it often comes as a shock that the Second World War is to the youth of today something vaguely heard about or some facts in the history book.

This author makes the war vivid, appallingly vivid, not the war of the battle lines but the devastation to a peaceful countryside, the disruption of families, the suffering of the innocent. The story centers around a true episode, involving the fate of fifty children who were living in a home for convalescent children near the Belgian coast when the Germans invaded Belgium. They were under the care of Justine Raymond and her helpers. It was a brilliant May morning when they heard at breakfast that war was declared and a few hours later came the first air raid.

How Justine led the children from Heyst to Ostend along refugee-choked roads, and again fled from Ostend to Dunkerque where they were eventually evacuated
