TWO GLASSES.

There stood two glasses filled to the brim, on a rich man's table, rim to rim. One was ruddy and as red as blood, and the other clear as the crystal flood. Said the glass of wine to the pale brother, "Let us tell the tales of the past to each other." I can tell of banquet and revel and mirth, and the proudest and grandest souls on earth. I have made the arm of the driver fall, and sent the ship down to the sea, and the shrieks of the lost were swept to me. For they said, "Behold, how great you be! Fame, strength, wealth, genius, before you fall." For your might and power are over all! Ho! Ho! pale brother, laughed the wine, "Can you boast of deeds as great as mine?" Said the wine glass, "I can not boast of a king dethroned or a murdered host, but I can tell of a heart once sad. By my crystal drops made light and glad— Of thirsts I've quenched, of brows I've laid, Of hands I've cooled and of souls I've saved; I've leaped through the valley, dashed down the mountain, Flowed in the river and played in the fountain, Slept in the sunshine and dropped from the sky, And everywhere gladdened the landscape and eye. I've eased the hot forehead of fever and pain, I have made the parched meadows grow fertile with grain. I can tell of the powerful wheel of the mill, That ground on flour and turned at my will; I can tell of manhood, debased by you, That I lifted up and crowned anew. I cheer, I help, I strengthen and aid; I gladden the heart of man and maid. I set the wine-bell for knitting me, And all are eager to receive me. These are the tales they told each other— The glass of wine and its pale brother— As they sat together, filled to the brim, On the rich man's table, rim to rim.

THE SISTERS.

It was the morning after the last social reception given by the Young Men's Dancing Club of Clyde for the winter of '86, and Mrs. Osborne and her two daughters had just seated themselves with their fancy work in the parlor set apart for the regular boarders of the Forrester house. The two young ladies were much alike in form and feature, but Lola, the younger, usually took precedence in social matters on account of her easy familiarity and the pleasure she derived from openly discussing her own and her neighbors' affairs. Isabel, the elder, commonly called Sly, a name fastened upon her by her sister on account of her reticence in talking over her secret likes and dislikes, and a somewhat retiring disposition, seemed well content to take the second place, and it was one which had been accorded to her since childhood by her mother, who was very partial to the chattering Lola. The ladies had not been seated long before they were joined by Mrs. Slayton, a mischievous young married woman, who, after dropping into a favorite rocker, opened the conversation by saying: "Ah, Miss Lola, you want to keep a close watch of your spring of nobility. I saw him flirting desperately with your sister last evening." "With Sly? Impossible!" "Not at all, my dear. Sly was standing in the bay-window, toying with the smilax in the hanging-basket with one hand while the Count de Fablo knelt at her feet and kissed the other rapturously. You must correct me, Sly, if I get wrong, but I do not think I am mistaken. I was going to the flower stand for a geranium leaf, and peeping behind the curtain to see if any one was there, I espied the enraptured Count." "Mrs. Slayton!" cried Sly, coloring violently. "Sly Osborne, is that true?" asked her sister, angrily. "Are you trying by any of your sly, underhand proceedings to force yourself upon the count's notice? Is it true, I say?" "No, Lola, it is not true," answered her sister, calmly. "I know there was something, though! I saw you go into the window myself. I believe you are trying to get Count de Fablo away from me. However, youn, lady, your efforts will be useless. Count de Fablo only notices you because you are my sister; he says you're absolutely plain."

HOW STORY LAW CAME.

His Statue of the Navigator made from Memory of a Vision.
Story's last statue, a Christ, is an original and beautiful conception. The dress is that of an Arab; the ceinture or under garment, rich and full, bound round the waist with a soft sash; and the meil, an upper one, a mantle, which was the seamless garment we read that our Lord wore. On the head is the ziffah or scarf, bound around by a fillet, which forms a soft visor-like framing above the brow; the ends of this ziffah fall over the shoulders and cover the long hair which you see under the shadow of its folds. This is the napkin, as the English translation of the Bible calls it, which was taken off, folded and laid beside our Lord in the grave. This costume is most effective, for it has the rich deep folds of the oriental quadrangular mantle, and is probably exactly like the dress our Saviour wore.

CELEBRATED CLOCKS.

Another King of Spain came to Geneva to see a clock which had been made by Droz, a merchant of that city. Upon the clock was seated a shepherd, a negro and a dog. As the hour was struck, the shepherd played upon his flute, and the dog played gently forth to touch an apple that hung from a tree under which the shepherd rested. The dog flew at him and barked so furiously that a live dog answered him, and the whole party left in haste. Venturing to return, one of the courtiers asked the negro in Spanish what time it was. There was no reply, but when the question was repeated in French an answer was given. This frightened the courtier, who rejoined his companions, and all of them voted that the clock was the work of the evil one.

B. F. Turner, yard master of the Charlotte, Columbia & Angusville railroad at Columbia, and an old and trusted employee, has been arrested for the most remarkable theft on record. He had a freight car, "R. & D. No. 233," loaded with twenty-five bales of cotton, run down to the junction near Columbia. There he unloaded it, stored the cotton in a gin house near the track, filled the car with cord wood and sent it adrift. After two months of searching, it was found empty and in bad order on a side track at Manchester, Va. Turner had sold nine bales of the cotton and the attention of a farmer who lived near the gin was attracted by the remaining bales stored and in charge of a negro. He finally reported the matter and caused Turner's arrest.

THE BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS.

RALEIGH, N. C., March 18.—At the recent session of the legislature an act was passed creating a bureau of labor statistics for North Carolina. The purpose of the bureau as defined in the act is as follows: "The said commissioners shall collect information upon the subject of labor, its relation to capital, the hours of labor, the earnings of laboring men and women, their educational, moral and financial condition and the best means of promoting their mental, material, social and moral prosperity. The commissioner shall annually publish a report in pamphlet form and send or cause to be sent a copy of the same to every newspaper published in this state, a copy to each member of the general assembly of North Carolina, a copy to each of the several states and county officers of the state, a copy to any citizen who may apply for the same either personally or by mail, and one hundred copies to each of the several labor organizations which may be in existence at the time of the publication of the report, in this state. He shall also make a full report to each session of the general assembly of the information collected by him and containing such recommendations as he may deem calculated to promote the efficiency of the bureau. The commissioner is hereby directed to endeavor to publish an accurate list of all the newspapers published in the state, and whether the same be published daily or weekly, and to forward to each and all a copy of his report promptly upon its being published; he is also directed to diligently inquire after the labor organization of the state and to see that notice are omitted in the distribution of the reports; he is further directed to confine his labors to this state."

From the foregoing it will be seen that the purpose of the legislature in establishing the bureau was to place before the people of our state as far as the same can be done, the moral, educational and financial condition of the working people of North Carolina. To do this, great amount of information must be gathered from many sources. A large part of this information must be obtained by other state bureaus, blanks have been prepared, with questions, which, if answered will elicit the information designed to be obtained by the act creating the bureau. Those in the state who may be interested in the work for which the bureau was created, whether they be employers or employees, landlords or tenants, are solicited as correspondents, and any such to whom this notice may come are requested to send their names on a postal card to the "Bureau of Labor Statistics, Raleigh, N. C." The above mentioned blanks will be sent to those who apply, with a return stamped envelope in which replies will be expected to questions asked. Correspondents will receive the reports and publications of the department, and any information it can give relating to its work.

It makes no difference to the President how great may be the rush of political and official callers, he will not neglect his receptions for the people. When he entered the east room recently he found about 200 visitors, many of whom appeared to be tourists. In the line the President recognized many New Yorkers, including several personal friends from Buffalo. He seemed particularly delighted to see a handsome old lady, somewhat resembling Mrs. R. B. Hayes, whom he addressed as Mrs. Lippett, of Buffalo. He invited her to walk into the red parlor, and inserted one of the ushers to notify Mrs. Cleveland. Further along in the line came a bright little boy from Chicago, accompanied by his mother. After paying his respects to the President he presented to him a package wrapped in pink tissue paper, which he said contained a hand-painted card case which he himself had made and painted. The President accepted the present graciously and promised to prize it highly. There were several Congressmen who had grown weary of waiting upstairs at the rear end of the line.—Correspondence Baltimore Sun.
