OUR AGRICULTURAL RESOURCES.

So vast and grand are the agricultural resources of the United States that there is hardly a single article of our production that is not found in some section of the country. Glance at the different portions of the country and you will find in each a different product that is the best of its kind in the world. Upon the Pacific slope we have the soil and climate that is best adapted to the production of the vine and the growth of citrus fruits. Apples, peaches, grapes, cherries, and oranges have been planted there, and their fruits are now familiar in every market of our country. Those with their chief products, such as wheat, corn, clover, alfalfa, will soon free us from any dependence upon the fruit regions of southeastern Europe.

Our new stores, a gentleman as well as a woman, with every article in the way of comfort and pleasure and his wardrobe will be the envy of his competitors who do not secure wearing apparel from the same source. Buying from many stores as it does, the Company will sell to the consumer just as low as any small dealer in the city can by the same goods.

This is the largest stock of their great success. Goods in large quantities can be bought at much lower figures than in small quantities, and the Morris Co. always give their patrons the benefit of the reduction. Watch and wait and you will see wonders accomplished by the Morris Co. in Tarboro during the year 1892. They mean business.

LOOKING FORWARD.

The old year, with its joys and sorrows, its pleasures and pains, is behind us. The new year is before us with every promise of being a prospect one—at least for the Morris Co. This Company has no idea of being outstripped in the mercantile race this year. It would take a whole encyclopedia to tell you what they propose doing for their patrons during 1892. They propose to watch the northern markets with the eye of an eagle, and let no opportunity slip to be the first with every novelty in their line of trade.

Through our stores a gentleman as well as a woman, with every article in the way of comfort and pleasure and his wardrobe will be the envy of his competitors who do not secure wearing apparel from the same source. Buying from many stores as it does, the Company will sell to the consumer just as low as any small dealer in the city can by the same goods.

LEARNING THE DAIRY BUSINESS.

From an Old Experienced Dasher Chern to a Successful Dairyman.
Mr. W. H. Gilchrist, a prominent New York dairyman, writes from a Richmond, N. C. location, on the 11th of October, 1891, that he has been in the dairy business for over thirty years, and that he has been successful in it. He says that the success of a dairyman depends upon the quality of his stock, the cleanliness of his dairy, and the skill of his dairymaid.
