DEATH TO MOSQUITOES.

Campaign Against Them and Flies Started in the South.

New Orleans, La., April 11.—The entire South has enacted uniform laws against the mosquito and the house fly as undesirable pests, who, under no circumstances, will be permitted to survive in inhabited communities. Health officers have not forgotten the lesson taught them in 1905 when yellow fever prevailed.

So, all over the South, in the villages as well as in the cities, health officers are opening an early campaign against the disseminators of deadly diseases, the mosquito and the house fly. While the mosquito spreads yellow fever the house fly disseminates malaria, typhoid fever and several other deadly diseases.

Under the direction of Dr. J. S. White, Marine Hospital surgeon, who fought out yellow fever in 1905, a regular set of laws and precautions have been devised. These are the same in all Southern cities and states.
