

Mr. Morgan Takes Issue With President.

Richmond, Va., April 23.—Taking a friendly issue with President Wilson's suggestion that the cotton crop should be curtailed this year and more time devoted to the production of foodstuffs, S. T. Morgan, President of the Virginia-Carolina Chemical Company and the Southern Cotton Oil Company, in a press interview, shows that the cotton plant is a tremendous food producer, and gives substantial reasons as to why the farmers of the South should make it their principal crop.

Mr. Morgan was led to come out publicly against the proposed curtailment of the cotton crop by the apparent support given this idea by President Wilson himself. In his address to the American people Monday, the President expressed the hope that the South would plant plenty of foodstuffs along with cotton, but warned Southern farmers against succumbing to the temptation of present high cotton prices and allowing the planting of the staple to curtail the raising of food crops.

"The boll-weevil and the scarcity of labor in the South," said Mr. Morgan, "will accomplish naturally all the curtailment in the cotton crop that the country can stand. To urge a further curtailment is to invite the gravest danger, because cotton is essential for both clothing and for food."

"It goes without saying that any good farmer ought, as nearly as possible, to raise on his farm what he consumes, but in a great many instances this is not practicable or possible. In my opinion, the serious curtailment of the cotton crop of the South would be a calamity from the standpoint of its food-producing value alone."

"For each bale of cotton produced there is produced approximately 1,000 pounds of cotton seed. This 1,000 pounds of seed produces about 140 pounds of refined cotton-seed oil. This cotton-seed oil will produce approximately 140 pounds of compound lard—the very best, edible vegetable oil. If, therefore, we should crush only 5,000,000 tons of seed out of a crop of 13,000,000 bales of cotton, we would produce 1,500,000,000 pounds of oil or lard compound."

"If the government allowed it, we could make from each 1,000 pounds of seed, in connection with milk and other products, 250 pounds of oleomargarine, as nutritious and wholesome, when properly made, as three-fourths of the butter now consumed in this country, and at about two-thirds its cost. Unfortunately, although oleomargarine has been approved by both the Departments of Agriculture and Internal Revenue, Congress saw fit to strike from the last revenue bill the provision to allow the manufacture of colored oleomargarine under conditions that would have made it commercially practicable."

"In addition to the lard and oil produced by 1,000 pounds of seed, there is produced from 150 to 300 pounds of cotton-seed hulls, which is one of the best foods for horses and cattle and which has been demonstrated, has almost as much food value for cattle as the best hay. If we crush 5,000,000 tons of seed, we produce more than 1,500,000,000 pounds of cotton-seed hulls—equivalent to 750,000 tons of hay. So if we crush 5,000,000 tons of cotton seed, we would produce 4,000,000,000 pounds of cotton seed meal, equal to more than 70,000,000 bushels of corn. From the same 1,000 pounds of seed is produced seventy-five pounds of lint which is used extensively for explosives in this and other countries, 1,000,000 bales of this class of lint having been used in the past two years in the manufacture of explosives."

"Of course, we all understand that this bale of cotton goes to clothe the world, and that it is, under normal conditions, the mainstay in our balance of trade and helps us to maintain our big supply of gold."

"The cotton crop begins to mature in July. In August ginning begins, and as soon as ginning begins the seed are ready for the cotton-seed oil mill. Within thirty days from the time the cotton is taken from the field, the oil, compound lard and oleomargarine is ready for the use of man. At the same time, the cotton-seed meal and the hulls are ready for the cattle, and the linters for the powder maker. If we should need food supplies early, then we certainly do not want to materially decrease the cotton crop in the South, as this is the earliest crop possible to grow and is useful for the feeding of both man and beast. After the corn crop is made, it is several months before it can be converted into food, that would be in the fall and winter, while from the cotton crop you can get oil and lard and oleomargarine certainly in September."

"Another thing: the whole world can make corn and wheat, but it is only a small section of it that can produce cotton, from which the world can make corn and wheat, but it is only a small section of it that can produce cotton, from which the world is clothed and from which such a tremendous percentage of edible fats and animal foods are made. "Therefore, I believe that it is hardly a good time to try to prevail on the South to minimize its cotton crop. If the world needs the food supplies, it needs the cotton, as there is no product from which man can be clothed or fed so quickly as from the cotton plant."

"Every Club Boy Feed a Family."

There are 5,070 boys and girls belonging to the club organizations, which is doing big things for North Carolina in this present economic and military crises. Besides, there are 350,000 other boys and girls belonging to an organization which will mean great things for the United States in this day of fighting, short crops and hard times.

Mr. S. G. Rubinow, in writing to the club members of the State, says: "There are 100 counties in the State. Supposing there were 200 boys and girls in every county who belonged to your organization, who grew corn, potatoes, pigs, poultry, peanuts, beans, vegetables, or anything else that could be eaten. Do you know what this would mean to the State?"

We need an army of 20,000 boys and girls in North Carolina to join your organization, to grow crops and raise pigs and poultry, with which our people and our soldiers must be fed. Armies, as Napoleon said, travel on their stomachs. In order to win, we must have food.

What is your slogan? Mr. Bradford Knapp, the chief of all this work in the South, suggests this slogan: "Every Club Boy Feed a Family." Says Mr. Knapp: "If every farm boy in North Carolina between the ages of 12 and 18 could raise enough food to sustain a family of five persons for one year, what a great thing it would be."

Read this again and study it. You hope to be the leader of your community some day. Why not now? Have you "got it in you?" Prove it. Here's what we want you to do, and in doing it you will be "just as deserving of commendation as the man who totes the gun."

Enroll all the boys and girls you know. Prove the fact that you are a rural leader. We want more corn, pigs, potatoes, poultry, peanuts—things that can be eaten. President Wilson believes in you. He has just said that the nation would have to depend on boys and girls like YOU.

Every one is expected to help. If you can't grow anything else, grow velvet beans; but grow something. "Overalls and farm implements" are just as important as uniforms and guns. We know you personally and we expect you to help. Send in the names. Do the work. Put the shoulder to the wheel. Be a part of this movement.—Farm Extension News.

Charlie Noble Broadwell.

Charlie Noble Broadwell was born July 13, 1915, and died March 12, 1917. Had he lived one more day he would have been twenty months old. He was the most lamb-like child I ever saw. He was sick all the days of his short but sweet little life, which made it so hard to part from him. I don't think a child can be nearer and dearer to its mother than Charlie was to me, but when I think that the Lord loved him more than I, I say Thy will, O Lord, not mine be done. He was taken with pneumonia and lived only nine days. All was done for him that a good physician, mother, father, brothers, sister and kind friends could do, but the Lord called, "Child come home," and he sweetly passed away, as easy as death can come. The last time I took him in my arms and saw death so near I turned my back on my darling sweet babe for the first time and cried aloud, "Lord, take him home to rest." I saw all earthly help fail and nothing but the help of the Lord. I believe his soul now rests in Heaven where it hears the sweetest of singing, for he always wanted some one to sing for him. I hope to meet him above where all is peace and love.

Charlie, what is home without thee? Sadness everywhere I roam; But I hope, dearest, to meet you In your bright eternal home.

When the toils of life are over And like you, we lay our armor by, May the Lord prepare us to meet you In a home beyond the sky.

The Bigness of Little Victories.

"If a dog is too big for you to fight the whole of him," said Jerome K. Jerome once, "take a bit of him and fight that."

It has always been an article of my creed that it never pays to scorn a small chance if it is in the direction of the victory you are after.

I once knew a college student who was very poor. He conceived the idea of waiting on table at the college hotel, but there was no vacancy. "Why can't I wait on the waiters?" he asked. "We have someone to wait on the waiters." "Why can't I wait on the workmen who are building the new addition to the library?" "We have plenty of waiters there, too. But say, will you scrub floors?" "Of course I will." So he scrubbed floors till there was a chance to wait on the workmen, and he waited on the workmen till there was a chance to wait on the waiters, and by and by he became a real waiter, and finally he ran a boarding house of his own.

I knew a theological student who wanted to learn to preach. "Will you go up on the Hudson and preach twice on Sunday and teach a Sunday school class and pay your own fare of three dollars and a half a Sunday?" his old pastor asked him. "Of course I will." So he did, and he told me twenty years afterward, when he had become a pastor of a church of eight hundred members, that every step in his life had been in a direct line of consequence from that small beginning.

I knew a young man who wanted to write for the press. He was offered an opportunity to conduct a single column in a young people's paper, for five dollars a month. Within two years things came about so that he was the editor of the whole paper. My college mate had a similar experience. He began in a newspaper office by sleeping under a counter and sweeping out the place. After a while he became managing editor and that led to his going into the diplomatic service. Now he is at the head of the Pan-American Union at Washington.

I mention these experiences by way of encouragement. You say you wish you had money to go through college. A woman has offered you a quarter to shovel out her ashes. It is not much, even for that job, but it is in the direction in which you are wishing. You wish to become an athletic director some day. I know one such today who began by coaching his small brother's "five-man team" in foot ball. You hope to become a doctor or a lawyer some day. Do you not know some lawyer or doctor in your town who will give you access to his books if you will tend his office for an hour after school? Do it. These tasks will help you to the summit of success that now seems so far away.

You may have the notion that folks no longer climb to the top from the bottom. You think they start at least half-way up. My observation does not teach me so. A friend of mine used to ride out evenings with Henry Ford when he was using what he earned at a mechanic's bench in the daytime to run the first Ford car at night. The other day I went through the great Wanamaker store in Philadelphia under the guidance of the principal of its wonderful school for its young employees. He told me that he began there as an elevator man. I asked him about the heads of certain departments whom I met. "They got all they know in our store," I asked about the general superintendent of employees. "He started as a cashboy."

None of these men could fight the whole mastiff at first, but, as a bulldog does, they selected a small but available bit and fought that.—Wm. Byron Forbush, in Exchange.
