Folks and Me.

It is a funny thing, but true, That folks you don't like don't like you. I don't know why this should be so. But just the same I allus know If am "sour," friends are few; If I am friendly, folks are too.

Sometimes I get up in the morn A-wishin' I was never born. And then my family wishes too That I had gone to some other place Instead of showin' them my face.

But let me change my little tune And sing and smile, then pretty soon The folks around me sing and smile (I guess 'twas catchin' all the while.) Yes, 'tis a funny thing, but true, That folks you like will sure like you.

$7,500 RAISED FOR EXPENSES AND OFFERING TO McLENDON

Melbane, May 14.—The greatest revival in the history of Melbane closed last night—that of Cyclone Mack. Thousands came forward yesterday morning, promising to reconsecrate their lives to Christianity. Yesterday was "Mack's Day" and free will offerings were taken up at each service. Approximately $4,000 was given above incidental expenses which amounted to about $3,500.

Jim Penny of Greensboro was one of Mack's guests yesterday and at each service he made addresses, lauding the evangelist to the skies, and in the opinion of Mebane, he could not say enough for Mebane is 100 per cent McLendon now, as it the case wherever he goes.

He will leave this evening immediately after the pageant for his home at Bennettsville, S. C., to rest up for another great revival which will begin at Durham Sunday, May 27.

G. Wiggs at five o'clock and marched to the cemetery carrying flowers. On reaching the cemetery "America" was sung, after which Rev. Neil McInnis, pastor of the Presbyterian church, was called upon and made some very fitting remarks, and paid a beautiful tribute to the heroes in gray. Dr. B. Lacy Hoge, of Berkley, West Va., was present and offered the invocation. The crowd then placed flags and flowers on the graves of the veterans.

A Plea For The Prodigal Girl

(The following poem was sent us for publication.)

I have read of the death of martyrs. The story of Peter and Paul; The story of Luther and Calvin. I respect and honor them all.

And also old Thomas and Stephen, Honest and faithful men; And I've read the sweet story of Jesus

And expect to read it again.

I've read of the good Samaritan, Of charity's lesson begun, And my heart goes out in great pity To the wayward, prodigal son.

All are so glad to welcome him, So quick to forget and forgive; It makes no difference what he has done, If he only comes back to live

They have always prayed for the prodigal boy Since ever the world begun; The joy, the glorious forgiveness Of the returning wayward son.

But poets seem to forget to write Of the saddest thing in the world, They are not so eager to welcome back The poor little prodigal girl

Just why she has turned out crooked, She happened to find the right one Who had the slick tongue of a Judas And that was your prodigal son.

Though he is upheld and forgiven, It is common all over the world That you scornful point out for gossip The poor little prodigal girl

There is nothing so truly pathetic As the life of maidens who fall, And if you search down to the bottom You will find man the bottom of it all.

But he is lead back in society, And nursed with the tenderest care; Held up to the world as a hero And mentioned in fervent prayer,

While she is cast out from her loved ones, Out in the hard, cruel world, And every one points out and scorns her,

The poor little prodigal girl

Now as has been said quite often, And we'll repeat it again, That the lowest of fallen women Are better than some of the men.

RECORD FOR SAFE TRAVEL ON TRAINS OF SOUTHERN

ATLANTA, Ga., May 14.—Figures just compiled by the safety department of the Southern Railway System show that a high degree of safety for passengers was accomplished during the year 1922 when the Southern handled a total of 17,668,805 passengers without a single fatality to any passenger as the result of an accident to a train or negligence on the part of the railway.

A total of 177,084 passenger trains were operated during the year and the average distance traveled by each passenger was 62.17 miles. Had one passenger ridden the entire distance that these passengers were carried, he would have traveled more than 44,000 times the distance around the earth.

Four passengers were killed as the result of their own acts in violation of the safety rules established for their protection. Of these, two fell from moving trains, one attempted to board a moving train and fell under it, and one jumped through the window of the coach in which he was riding.

"These figures," says a statement issued by the safety department of the Southern, "show what, while the Southern has attained a remarkable degree of efficiency in protecting the passengers who ride on its trains, no refinement of protective features can insure the safety of persons who carelessly or deliberately violate the common laws of safety and the rules which have been established for their protection."

Damp Dwellings.

Damp dwellings are undesirable because of the extra hazards introduced through this condition. For one thing, damp dwellings are cold. The hazard from colds, bronchial and lung troubles is increased owing to the fact that the heating is apt to be insufficient—particularly in late spring and early fall. Dampness gets the better of human vigilance. The physical resistance of those who live under such conditions is apt to be worn down to the point that disease germs of one sort or another find a foothold. Things go from bad to worse. Sickness and deaths follow. The house in question comes to be regarded, after a time, as unhealthy.

In the case of many a farm home nothing further need be done to eliminate dampness than to cut out or trim the trees standing around it. Particularly in regions where the first settlers found no trees, have farm dwellings been fairly smothered, in some instances, with the dense foliage of the trees, now mature, which were planted years ago around the house. Letting in more sunlight, in many cases, will not only improve health conditions, but the physical depreciation of the property will be retarded. This may be as important in certain cases as planting more trees in others. Subsoil drainage may be necessary—in case of a wet cellar. A wet cellar is of considerable menace, indirectly, owing to the fact that conditions are favorable for mildew, rot, and mouldy odors. A wet basement always means a damp house.—Indiana Farmer's Guide.

High School and Local History.

The people of Goldsboro are promoting a mighty good idea in local education. It has its beginning in the High School, where the story of the town and its government is being told by interesting citizens, the purpose being to give the younger generation a clearer understanding on the general subject of home government and to awaken in them, as citizens of tomorrow, some appreciation of their future responsibilities. The talks have had to do with matters closely related to city life and development of civic interests, and arousing the interest of the school children in subjects of the kind, the Goldsboro people are surely paving the way for better citizenship. One of this series of talks was made by Mr. Lionel Weil, and covering as it did, the history of Goldsboro from its pioneer days to the present, giving in detail the character of the various changes in city government, was regarded of sufficient value as to justify publication in pamphlet form. There is given a picture of the Goldsboro of the 70s, with a train of crude passenger coaches of the day standing behind a wood-burning locomotive in the center of the town, with one side of the street bare of buildings, and a block of the type common to country towns on the other. There is also given a picture of the site of the lost town of Waynesborough, on the Neuse, near the present site of Goldsboro.

These studies in town government and local history are being promoted jointly by the Goldsboro High School and Chamber of Commerce, and the idea developed is one which should become of common adoption in North Carolina towns.—Charlotte Observer.
