"Satisfaction" Clothing

TALK NUMBER TWO

RECENTLY we had Talk Number One about our "Satisfaction" Clothing. The results were so satisfactory, that we come now with Talk Number Two. Why is our Clothing called the "Satisfaction" Clothing? you may ask. For two reasons: we know who makes it, and we put our personal guarantee upon every piece we sell. If it should not prove to be all right, we make it right. Could you expect more?

How We Save You Money On Clothing

It costs us practically nothing to carry the line. We would have to pay just as much house rent and keep the same number of clerks if we didn't sell Clothing. So we can easily save you from 10 to 20 per cent. On a $5 suit you save about $1 if you lay it from us. Let us sell your next suit.

We also sell Shoes, Shirts, etc.

WOMAN

A thrifty woman will make her home attractive, though it may be a hut in the wilderness.
Women sometimes lose sight of great things by their attention to trifling details.
Woman's honesty is proverbial. The exceptions are few and far between.
Women never enter into confidences with each other. Men usually confide them and induce women to join in their execution.
A wronged woman should be implacable, but rarely is. She is more likely to forgive and forget.
It is supposed that the injunction to turn the other cheek if one is smitten was directed exclusively to women.
Women are supposed to hide behind a smiling face all the sorrows of an aching heart. Many succeed in practicing the deception.
The woman who betrays the anguish of her soul to the world for her claim to the sympathy of her sincere friends.
If women would only realize that few are interested in their woes or their ambitions, they would not so often become hoarse and business.
Women rarely underestimate their own worth. Proper dignity and self respect command and adornment so much desired by all women.
Egotism in a man is trying; in a woman it is insufferable.
The acknowledgement of one of the greatest men of the world, "All that I am or can be I owe to my angel mother," Lincoln, should be an inspiration to all mothers to emulate the mother of Lincoln.

The woman who claims the credit of her husband's success has probably contributed very little toward it.

Women are happiest who are willing to share in the reflected glory achieved by their husbands to which they have contributed sometimes.

Setting up rival claims for fame and popular favor generally ends in inspiring criticism and disgust.
A noble woman is not easily discouraged, and often displays greater heroism than a man would under like circumstances.

There is no time in the life of a man when he can do without a woman. In infancy and old age he is dependent upon her tenderness; in middle life she is his helpmate and inspiration.

Probably the last thought of most persons is of their mother.

Women should make their homes so attractive that neither husbands nor children would wish for clubs in which to spend their leisure hours.

It speaks volumes for wives and mothers when their husbands and children are unwilling to leave home.

Why are men so selfish? Because their mothers and wives have made them so by anticipating their wants and waiting upon them.

The most laudable ambition in a woman is to keep pace with her husband in his achievements and hold his love by her tenderness and devotion.

Jealousy is the most fatal disease that ever attacked man or woman.

ASHLEY HORNE FOR GOVERNOR

His Record as a Confederate Soldier Without a Blemish.

A STERLING DEMOCRAT

As Farmer and Business Man He Has Been Successful Public Spirit and Patriotic. He Leads in All Progressive Movements.

(Raleigh News and Observer.)

To the Democrats of North Carolina:

Ashley Horne, of this place, is a candidate for Governor, subject to the action of the Democratic State convention.
I have known Mr. Horne all of his life and feel that it is not out of place for me, of my own knowledge, to state what manner of man he is. He is a native of Johnston county; is sixty-five years old, had a common school education, but in early manhood volunteered as a private in the Confederate army, and followed the fortunes of the Army of Northern Virginia for four years, and surrendered with it at Appomattox. His record as a soldier is without blemish.

After the war he had neither the time nor ability to complete his education. Necessity required him to go to work. The first year after going home he cultivated a crop, then clerked in a store, and in 1867 began merchandising for himself. He prospered, made friends of his customers, and many of the men who began to trade with him forty years ago are still his customers and friends.

As a farmer and as a business man he has been successful, and he has also embarked in other lines of business. Now he is regarded as one of the most successful men in the State. While he has other large lines and is engaged in banking, insurance, manufacturing, merchandising, he is still a large and active farmer. He is not merely a farmer on paper, but every day during the crop season a visitor would be apt to find him in the field, actually carrying on large, active, and successful farming operations. And so well informed does he keep himself on market prices of farm products, that many will recall that during recent years he has published cotton letters that contained wholesome advice to the farmers with regard to holding their cotton. This advice has proved to be well founded, and there is no estimating the money it saved the farmers of the state, and they were not slow in expressing their gratitude to him. In fact, he is on all business propositions if very practical and wise counsel.

He was one of the officers of the Cotton Growers' Association, and he has established warehouses somewhat on the plan of the bonded warehouse system now advocated by that Association.
He has always been a strict, regular and organization Democrat. He has voted the Democratic tickets as they were printed.

In the early '90s, when Populism was making such headway among the people, he opposed it, but he understood the hard conditions under which the farmers were suffering; and, instead of denouncing their movement, as many unwise men did, he treated them with kindness and sympathy, dissuading them from leaving the Democratic party, but never denouncing them. In the country immediately contiguous to Clayton, Populism never made any headway, and one of the reasons for this, was the wise and kindly manner in which the farmers were treated by Mr. Horne and other Democrats. After the fusion of Populism and Republicanism carried the State, and when many Democrats felt that it would be best for us to make some arrangement with the Populists by which the State could be relieved, Mr. Horne was outspoken in his denunciation of the movement. Six or eight years before he had been moderate and conciliatory in dealing with the Populist, for he understood the burden under which the farmers were staggering. But in 1898 he had no sympathy for any movement looking to a fusion with Butler, Russell and Thompson. He was outspoken in denouncing any such proposition. He came to the State Convention in 1898 and threw his whole influence in favor of a straight fight.

If there is one idea in Mr. Horne's mind, or if there is one motive in his life, which predominates over all others, it is his opposition and hatred of monopolies and combines. He has always stood for the individual and in favor of the freest competition. He does not believe in any law which gives one man an advantage over another, and he believes that any agreement between two or more men, or two or more companies to restrict competition, or to create a monopoly is a crime against human rights and ought to be punished in the severest manner. Not a trust-buster on paper, but a man who has systematically and earnestly fought monopolies in the only way he found it practical to fight them.

When the cotton oil industry became important he was one of the men who organized the first cotton mill in Raleigh. When he ascertained that the American Cotton Oil Company had obtained control of that mill he sold every dollar of his stock and retired. When it appeared that the fertilizer business was going into hands of large concerns, he was one of the men who helped to organize the Carolina Phosphate and Fertilizer Works near the City of Raleigh.

Propositions were made to buy that mill out. Mr. Horne opposed them for the future of the mill himself provided it was kept independent. A few years ago, when it appeared that the American Cotton Oil Company and the Southern Cotton Oil Company would control the cotton seed market of the South, and that they possibly might combine and regulate prices, immediately Mr. Horne assisted in the building of an independent mill at Clayton, which mill is now owned and controlled by Clayton people and run independently. It provides an independent market for seed and furnishes independent of other companies fertilizers.

He is president of the Clayton Oil Mills. In 1902 many North Carolina mills favored going into a combination, so as to effect, it is said, large economy. The proposition was made to Mr. Horne to have the Clayton mills included in the merger. He declined to even submit the proposition to the stockholders. The fate of that merger justified the wisdom of his course.

He was one of the first men to advocate the formation of home insurance companies, both fire and life, and to stop the outflow of North Carolina money for fire insurance. He was one of the early stockholders of the North Carolina Home, and is an officer and director in a number of successful life and fire companies.

One of the rules of his business life is to give the preference, where practicable to do so, to local and independent companies, rather than to foreign companies or large combinations of capital. As far as it is possible to do so, he taboos trusts and monopolies. From the purchase of the oil which lubricates his machinery to the placing of material upon his property, he always gives the preference to local dealers and independent companies.

Mr. Horne is not identified with any particular faction of the party. He is neither conservative nor radical, so called. He is a Democrat plain. If elected to office he will not endeavor to build up any faction, nor to create any personal advancement. He will be content to serve the people in the office of Governor for four years, and at the end of the term return to private life. He will not use the great office of Governor as the stepping stone to any higher honors.

Mr. Horne will not make a canvass of the State prior to the convention. If nominated, he will take the stump and uphold the Democratic cause. He is able to make, and will make a strong and vigorous canvass, but he will not expect any business people to come out and hear him speak when he is canvassing for himself and not as the standard bearer of his party.

Mr. Horne's personal life is without spot or blemish. No person, however much he may differ with Mr. Horne in politics or otherwise, can be found who would impugn his personal honor or believe him guilty of an improper act. He has been a sober, moral man all his life. He was a temperance man when temperance and prohibition were not popular. As far back as 1881 he voted for prohibition, he has always stood for temperance, for the home, the school and the church.

He has always been a progressive man; and, while by far the largest tax-payer of his section, he has always voted for special taxes for good schools and good roads, and has favored everything that promoted the welfare of his community, regardless of its financial effects upon him.

Mr. Horne favors the strict enforcement of the laws passed by the last General Assembly regulating railroads, and requiring them to give better service at reduced rates. He believes in holding corporations to their duty and within the law, and doing this with a strong, bold hand. He has always favored strict regulations of corporations; has always favored requiring railroads to perform their duties vigorously, and at the lowest possible rates, and he never rode a mile on a railroad pass, believing that railroads should serve and not boss. More than thirty years ago when the rates on cotton between Clayton and Raleigh were too high, he organized a wagon train and sent the cotton through the country, until the railroads in disgust, asked him to name what he thought was a fair rate. This he did, and this rate has never been exceeded. He has always opposed the granting of special favors to railroads. In 1885 he was a member of the State Senate. The Richmond & Danville railroad proposed to build to Murphy if the State would donate free the use of several hundred convicts as any to see that work completed, but he thought the Richmond & Danville was under obligations to build it at its own expense. He voted against the donation of the convicts, and was one of the Senators who signed a protest against the measure.

This is a brief account of Mr. Horne's life. He is in the race today. He is encouraged by promises of support from every section of the State. We believe he will be nominated.

In conclusion, I beg to say that if you want to support a Confederate soldier for governor, Mr. Horne is the man. If you want a successful business man, and a life long farmer, for the office, Mr. Horne is the man. If you want a man who has been a consistent and life long enemy to trusts and combinations, Mr. Horne is the man. If you want a man who has been leader in the industrial development of his section, Mr. Horne is the man. If you want a man who has always stood for good roads, for temperance, education, and morality, Mr. Horne is the man.

If you want a man for Governor who will give his whole time to that office and who will not aspire to other positions, Mr. Horne is the man. If you want to support a straight, firetired Democrat, who has never turned either to the right or to the left, but who has consistently fought the party's battles for more than 40 years, Mr. Horne is such a man. If you want a man for Governor who will fill the office well, who has never done and will never do an unworthy or improper act, who will never do anything that will require defense, apology, or explanation, Ashley Horne is such a man.

ROWLANDS TAKE LIFE EASY

Alleged Murderers of Engineer Strange Held Without Bail in Wake County.

(News and Observer.)

In Wake county jail, in cells in different sections of the building, the Rowlands are taking life easy, spending most of their time in reading, this being interrupted by the visits of friends and of those who get "permits" from counsel to see them, said "permits" being open sesame to the jail and to conversations with the Rowlands.

Mrs. Rowland is in the upper tier of cells, there being one other occupant of this section of the jail, Rosa Johnson, the two white women being in separate cells. Mrs. Rowland has a blanket on the floor to serve as a carpet, her bed is cozy and white, and she has at hand a full supply of water, a wash stand and a bath tub, the jail having in it a modern system of plumbing. Dr. Rowland's quarters are in the new tower of the jail and he too is comfortable fixed up. Both Rowland and his bride take their meals from Giersch's cafe, special orders being made for each, breakfast at 8:30 a. m. and dinner at 2:30 p. m. No supper is ordered and with the two meals a day comes enough to save for an evening lunch.

It is learned from the jailer that both Mr. and Mrs. Rowland appear in good spirits and talk brightly to their attorneys and friends who see them, seemingly looking forward with confidence to the time when their case is to be heard. Mrs. Rowland is often visited by her sister, Mrs. DeVane of Indiana, whose features are strikingly like those of her sister, and the other day received a bundle of clothing from Mrs. DeVane. She has no trunk in her cell, and it is reported that by her instructions Mrs. DeVane has sold all her belongings that were in the Strange residence on Franklin street.

Gov. Glenn at Jamestown.
(Lexington Dispatch.)

One of the proudest days North Carolina ever had was last Wednesday at the Jamestown Exposition when Governor Robert B. Glenn addressed the National Editorial Association. President Roosevelt, Jacob Riis, John Temple Graves and others addressed the newspaper men and every effort was made to give them the best of service at reduced rates. He believes in holding corporations to their duty and within the law, and doing this with a strong, bold hand. He has always favored strict regulations of corporations; has always favored requiring railroads to perform their duties vigorously, and at the lowest possible rates, and he never rode a mile on a railroad pass, believing that railroads should serve and not boss. ## 10 BLOCKADERS AND 13 STILLS CAPTURED Bold Raid by Revenue Men in Stokes County—Led by Two Detectives.

(Winston-Salem Special 19th to Charlotte Observer.)

A long distance message from Mt. Airy tonight says that a squad of revenue officers, consisting of 27 men led by two secret service men from Washington, D. C., today made a big raid and captured 13 blockade stills and ten men a short distance from Smithtown, in Stokes county, which has been noted nearly half a century for the number of moonshiners in that section. So bad has been the condition of affairs that revenue officers have been afraid to go in here and the stills have been doing a thriving business. It is reported that sentinels were maintained by the makers of the fire-water who gave the moonshiners warning of any approach of officers by a large bell.

The raid today began at 4 a. m. and was not terminated till this afternoon at 5 o'clock, when the men and stills taken were safely lodged at Mt. Airy. The two secret service men who led the squad of officers are said to have come from Washington some weeks ago and since that time have been engaged with the men in the illicit business in order to learn the exact state of affairs and to find out how to capture those engaged in the business. Having learned this, a good supply of rifles was secured from Washington and the raiding squad was organized at Mt. Airy yesterday. From that place it marched to Smithtown and at 4 o'clock this morning the first raid was made, and nearly all day was required before the stills and men captured were landed at Mt. Airy which is 30 miles from the scene of the raid. It is reported that several of the officers and moonshiners were wounded in the raid.

Why Jefferson Firmly Refused a Third Term.
(Baltimore Sun.)

Some of the ardent admirers of Mr. Roosevelt seem to forget that he is not the only President who has been popular enough to be urged for a third term. The whole country tried to force Washington to serve as President another term, and it was suggested that he be re-elected as long as he lived. But Washington set the precedent of "two terms only," and no other President has departed from it.

When Thomas Jefferson's second term was about to expire thousands of his admirers insisted that no other man could guide the ship of State. Legislature after legislature, embracing every section of the country, urged him to be a candidate for a third term, and his re-election would have been assured. The legislature of Maryland, by formal resolution, requested that he consent to accept another term. But Mr. Jefferson was firm in his determination and steadfastly refused to depart from the precedent set by the first President.

In his reply to the Maryland legislature Mr. Jefferson said: "If some termination to the service of the Chief Magistrate be not fixed by the Constitution, or supplied by practice, his office normally four years, will, in fact, become for life, and history shows how easily that degenerates into an inheritance."

"I feel it my duty to do no act which shall essentially impair that principle; and shall unwillingly be the person who, disregarding the sound precedent set by an illustrious predecessor, should furnish the first attempt of prologation beyond the second term of office."

Andrew Jackson was so popular with the masses that he could have served another term if he had made the canvass. But he considered that custom had made the two term limit as absolute as if it had been set down in the body of the Constitution.

The attempt to elect Grant for a third term ended in such complete failure that such a thing was not suggested again for a number of years.
Ex-President Cleveland has not only firmly refused to allow the use of his name for a third term candidacy, but he is distinctly annoyed by even this suggestion of such an ambition.
Mr. Roosevelt's popularity among the great mass of American voters probably surpasses that of any other man in a generation. But it is not so great as that of Washington or Jefferson, and the demand for his re-election is not so unanimous as was the demand to which they firmly refused to yield.

Col. Henry Harrison Hall, a prominent Confederate veteran, a great-grandson of President William Henry Harrison, and a second cousin of President Benjamin Harrison, died at Aiken, S. C., last Thursday. He was 59 years of age.

SOME BIG FIGURES

(Washington Post.)

The "foreign trade" of the United States is greater than ever before, and for the eleven months last passed amounts to the stupendous sum of $9,000,000,000 and upward, of what exports are aggregated $1,742,359,210 and the imports $1,322,005,432, a balance of trade "in our favor" of $420,353,778. This looks like opulence, and everybody is very proud and ostentatious about it.

Especially are we stuck up over that "favorable balance in trade," which one school of political economists thinks a balance of hubbub. The other school argues that we have sold more than we bought. That is a homely and plausible argument, and appeals to the thrifty husbandman; but the retort is that we have parted with more than we got in return, and that, too, is plausible and forcible in the world of logic.

The balance of trade is in our favor, and we are prosperous. The balances of trade is adverse to England, and England is prosperous. From this one might agree that balance of trade neither make nor unmake prosperity. In fact, every seller is a buyer, and every buyer is a seller, and exchanges what he can spare for that of which he is in greater need. That is all foreign trade is, and all any other trade is for that matter.

The improvident thing about our "foreign trade" is that nearly all of our exports, that are not made up of something to eat, consist of raw materials, much of which our doctors of statistics class "manufactured products." The biggest item is cotton in the bale, that is the finished product of the farmer and the raw material of the spinner. Another very large item is copper ingots, which are raw material in the same sense that pig iron is.

England, whose foreign trade is three times per capita what ours is, exports nothing that can be classed as raw material, unless it be coal, but her imports of raw materials are enormous. The same is true of Germany, a protection country, with a tariff conducted on the Roger Q. Mills idea of free raw material and tariff for revenue on finished products. Massachusetts is hankering for a tariff like that now, and in 1890 gave a big majority for it.

This country produces something like 80 per cent of the world's supply of cotton, and exports in the bale above 60 per cent of that. "Pig Iron" Kelly taught that such a policy meant ruin. Our Southern brethren have gone extensively into cotton manufacture, but it will be many a year ere they do be business in that line that England does.

In the matter of trade we have so stimulated the home market that foreign trade has to shift for itself. It will not be denied, however, as this three-billion mark shows. When we go out after foreign trade in an intelligent way we will soon pass England in the race. That day will come.

Worse Than Useless.
(Human Life.)

James J. Hill, the railroad president, was once riding at night on the rear end of his private car when his train passed over a long wooden trestle. A freight train had gone over a few minutes before, and Mr. Hill remembered he had given orders that after the passing of all trains over this trestle a track patrolman should go over the structure with a bucket of water and extinguish any embers that might have fallen from the locomotive. Though the Hill special was going along at forty miles an hour, the alert eye of the president caught sight of a hole in the bottom of the bucket as the watchman, in the moonlight, threw the vessel over his shoulder. Mr. Hill ordered the train back to the trestle and summoned the watchman to him.

"My man, you are to the Great Northern Company just what that hole is to the bucket you carry—a good deal worse than useless. You may throw the bucket away and look for another job. Human life is too dear to trust it to one of your kind."

Editor A. Roscowser, of the Goldsboro Herald, got a whipping several days ago under peculiar circumstances. He has the habit of giving an unusually hard grip when shaking hands; this for the purpose of showing his wonderful strength. Meeting a Syrian merchant in his town, he extended his hand and proceeded to make the Syrian cry out in pain, whereupon the latter proceeded to whip the editor most unmercifully.
