INCREASE OF FOOT-BALL

Remarkable Popularity of Grid-iron Game in Short Time

FIRST REAL GAME IN 1876

Great Strides Made in Last Five Years Because of National Interest Created—Has Never Gained the Favor Baseball Claimed in Its Beginning.

About the time that organized baseball became a powerful factor in American sports, says the Louisville Courier-Journal, American football crept in. Not so many are apt to realize that football statistics are able to tell stories of football players of prominence, and yet when the statement is made that the game of football has developed with more rapidity than any sport in the United States, growing from a weakling to a lusty young giant in an incredibly short period of time, it is stating a common truth which is well known to every sporting authority and cheerfully granted by every dealer in sporting goods in the United States. In 1876 the National League of baseball clubs was organized. We had plenty of baseball before then, but this new organization helped vastly to put baseball on the substantial footing it enjoys at the present time.

How many are there who know that, in the same year, 1876, the real game of American football was inspired? How few there are who would think, so far as time is concerned, that the rise of baseball and football in a measure is synonymous. And the reason for it all is the fact that football was a little backward at the start and has only leaped to its popularity within the last score of years, while baseball swung into general favor from the date of the inception of a well constituted organization.

The missionaries of football throughout the United States have been the college men. Westerners who went East to study at Harvard and Yale, at Princeton and at other universities which have picked up football one after the other, returned home filled with the longing to see football elevens established in the cities in which they resided. As the West became more thickly settled, and colleges sprang up here and here throughout the country, there was a desire on the part of the students to emulate the East in the matter of participation in football, and the result was the gradual introduction of the game into the larger educational institutions, and from those to the smaller.

From 1880 to 1890 there was always football in the United States, but little was heard of it except in college centers. It was a long way from becoming a sport which was some day to command thousands of columns of attention from the newspapers of the land. After 1890 the big games between Harvard and Yale, and Yale and Princeton, and between other colleges of prominence, began to be witnessed by systematically increasing crowds. It was discovered that men were traveling from one limit of the United States to the other to be present at the annual football game between their alma mater and some university dearly loved as an enemy. As the crowds swelled and their interest waxed, the game was forced more and more on public attention, but it is only within the last five years that football has attained anything like the popularity of baseball, and now, considering the brief time in which it is possible to play, it is a question if, all things considered, it does not outstrip baseball in the feverish anxiety of its votaries to make the most of their opportunity.

When it is known that the output of a factory furnishing football supplies is now twenty times greater than it was five years ago, some idea may be had of the increased number of football players in the United States. The output of the same factory is almost fifty times greater than it was twenty years ago, or even fifteen years ago.

Whether boys of tender years should be allowed to play football is a question which it is not the purpose of this article to debate. It is a matter which rests solely with the parents. One thing is very certain, no boy should be permitted to take part in the game who is not sound constitutionally. It is the most trying of all our outdoor pastimes, and while it may be splendid exercise and a tonic for the strong, it is far too greedy in its demands for the weak. To go through a game of football is the equivalent of splitting wood in the back yard, and if that act were impressed energetically on some youngsters who want to play but are hardly up to physical requirements, it might discourage them to such an extent that they would be willing to sit on the fence and watch the others.

Lipton To Try Again.
Sir Thomas Lipton, thrice defeated in his efforts to obtain possession of the America's cup has determined to try the fourth time to win the trophy. This news is not surprising. Although little had been said in public of Sir Thomas' future purpose in the international yachting line, occasional hints have been dropped which have led to the belief that he has been hard at work with the view of successfully solving the perplexing problem how to wrest the trophy standing for the "blue ribbon of the sea" from its custodians of 54 years.
