GOOD ROADS IN FRANCE. How They Are Constructed and Mai

Consul Brunot of St. Etienne writes of the excellent roads in France and the government method of maintaining them. He says:

"France had wretched roads in for mer times, and this notwithstanding the good example left by the Roman oc cupation. Indeed, highroad accidents were a favorite stock in trade of the old romancers. Now the roads are not only nearly perfect and good at all seasons, but are beautified by artistic stone bridges and frequently lined with fruit and shade trees. Spasmodic forts were made to better the roads mostly around Paris, under Louis XIV. (1643-1715), but it was not until abou 1775 that the serious work of building great roads of national extent was un dertaken, and Napoleon I, carried it forward vigorously as a part of his mil itary schemes, uniting frontier points with the capital. Never has the work ceased, except during periods of war, and the more difficult sections, at first left to a more convenie season, are steadily being built, w' le new cutoffs and connecting links are continually being declared open for service. The roads are divided into six classes, as follows:

"First. - National roads, built and maintained by the government, 21,30

"Second.-Departmental (state) roads built and maintained by the political divisions traversed by them, 15,700

"Third.-Principal local roads, trav ersing two or more townships (com munes), are maintained by them with government aid, 124,000 miles.

"Fourth, Secondary local roads, the same as the preceding, except that they are of less importance and are maintained by the townships under su pervision by the government, 150,000 miles.

"Fifth.-Minor local roads, still less important than the foregoing and maintained by the townships under the supervision of government engineers. "Sixth.—Rural roads, lanes of small importance entirely maintained by the townships without any intervention o supervision by the government.

"The rules for grades are nation roads, 3 per cent; departmental roads 4 per cent: principal and secondary local roads, 5 per cent, which is the maximum allowed, except in extremely mountainous regions or on the most portant roads, where there is too little truffic to warrant the expense of reducing the grade to within the rule. The method of construction for morly was to grade the bed level and lay a stone dressing of a depth of 174 inches in the middle, diminishing to 14 inches at the sides, but experience proved that a better plan was to giv the earth bed the same rounded form ness of the stone layer was reduced t 11% inches. This is the method nov have been built on this plan, the others being macadam roads, built of materia found on the spot, and some minor roads of gravel and earth."
