Roosevelt should be pardoned for desiring to be the nominee of his party for he sees defeat for Taft but hopes to stem the tide with his name at the head. But can he do it? If the Democrats are wise it can not be. All signs point to a Democratic year but an error can spell the victory.

What Rev. R. L. Davis showed the people of Raleigh can be done in every city and hamlet of the State. The officers know where every bugle rings and pines his death trade, so do the men who make and should see that the laws are enforced. The lack of moral courage is one of the sad facts which we have to face.

The agreement of the senatorial candidates is the proper one. No one ever desires to have another recurrence of the Kitchin-Craig fight. With a primary every Democrat can express his personal preference for any one of the four men who are seeking the election. The primary is the best and cleanest way to nominate, especially county officers. It eliminates the rowdyism at conventions.

More About Fertilizer Test

We are reproducing the article on fertilizer test as we failed to state in the article last week that the test was made on the lands of the Williamston Land and Improvement Company of the Washington Road near Skeelsy Church. This test was made under the direction of the State Department of Agriculture.

The year was unusually dry and perhaps if the seasons had been different, the results would have varied. But we must conclude from the results that any light sandy soil in Eastern Carolina which grows and matures crops early should have little or no acid, not too much nitrogen but a heavy application of potash. A growing crop such as cotton takes as much potash from the land as does acid and a crop of tobacco will take from six to seven times as much potash as acid. Then why should we continue to put our fertilizers 8 per cent acid and 2 per cent potash, when our lands are already poorer in potash than acids.

Of course, every farmer knows that he can get all the nitrogen he needs from the free air by planting the proper legumes and, diversifying. Yet there are many who persist in paying 20 cent per pound for it. But we are learning and the day will come when we shall be better able to free ourselves from the guano trusts and at the same time produce larger crops.

Blamed a God Worker

"I blamed my heart for severe distress in my left side for two years," writes W. Evans, Danville, Va., "but I know now it was indigestion, as Dr. King's New Life Pills completely cured me." Best for stomach, liver and kidney troubles, constipation, headache or debility, 25c. at Saunders & Fowden.

To Our Subscribers

For the first year in the history of our business, we have not sent statement to our subscribers. We have relied upon their desire to help us keep things moving by coming forward and paying the small amount due from them. Collections have been below the mark and we are urging each subscriber to notice his label and send in the amount due. Unless this is done we shall have to issue statements, which is every business man's way of collecting. We prefer avoiding the necessity of sending statements. But the cost of publication is great—few of our subscribers, perhaps, realize the amount of money that is expended each week for the paper which does not cost them two cents per copy. We feel that most of our friends who are in arrears have just neglected to send us their amount and this is a reminder to them.

Boys' Corn Clubs

THE ENTERPRISE is always glad to see every good thing move forward, and stands ready to help. It has urged the formation of Boys' Corn Clubs throughout the county, because the young and successful corn-grower will become the prosperous and intelligent farmer of the future. In order to promote this forward movement among the boys of the county, we will offer the following prizes for 1912:

First.—Three years' subscription to THE ENTERPRISE to the boy that makes the best mark as a corn-grower in each township of Martin County.

Second.—Two years' subscription for the second best yield.

Third.—One year's subscription for the third best yield.

This corn must be planted, fertilized and harvested under the rules of the N. C. Boys' Corn Club as prescribed by the State Department of Agriculture. These rules may be had from the Department or from Prof. R. J. Peel, Supt. of Education of Martin County.

Prof. Peel will be the judge and prizes will be awarded at once upon his decision. There are ten townships in the county and this means thirty boys in the county can get six years' subscription free, and at the same time gain knowledge which will be of great value to them in future years.

This Store Won't Guarantee Calomel

But We Have a Liver Medicine That We Do Guarantee With Money-Back Offer

The next time you think you need a dose of calomel, don't take it. Even if you have taken it often before, this might be the very dose that would subvert you. Its use is sometimes followed by dangerous after-effects. If you are constipated or ill or if your liver has gotten lazy and inactive, two or three doses of Dodson's Liver-Tone, pleasant-tasted vegetable liquid, will "make you feel like new."

We would not recommend Dodson's Liver-Tone in place of calomel if we were not willing to fully guarantee it. So anybody who buys a bottle of Dodson's Liver-Tone at Saunders & Fowden drug store and does not find it a perfect substitute for calomel may come into the store any day and get his or her money back.

It has absolutely no bad after-effects and is harmless for children as well as grown-ups.

How Cold Affects the Kidneys

Avoid taking cold if your kidneys are sensitive. Cold congests the kidneys, throws too much work upon them, and weakens their action. Serious kidney trouble and even Bright's disease may result. Strengthen your kidneys, get rid of the pain and soreness, build them up by the timely use of Foley Kidney Pills. Tonic in action, quick in results. Saunders & Fowden.

At the Junction

Julian Grove, burdened with a heavy suitcase and an humbled pride, descended the steps of the yellow day-coach that formed half of the only train on the Linden Valley road. He sat himself on an unused baggage truck to wait until the south-bound train should come along.

Julian preferred the winter sunlight and the crisp air to the lifeless heat of the big stove and the reek of many bodies. He was going humbly to confess his faults, and he wanted to keep clear headed that they might remain fresh in his mind.

He felt that he needed to be watchful, for in his heart he believed the fault to be few. There was grave danger that he might forget again that he was the offender, and take the same attitude of injured dignity that had caused Lottie Maynard to go hurrying back to the city with the declaration that when he came to his senses she might be ready to talk to him again.

There was an accent on the "might" that left the matter in doubt, and Julian felt that it behooved him to keep vividly in mind what Lottie declared to be his offenses.

Mentally Julian recited the catechism of his offenses, punctuating his self-examination with appropriate remarks concerning a train that was two hours late. He was still occupied with this task when a distant whistle sounded, and the waiting passengers hurried from the station to the platform. There was some grumbling when it was seen that this was only a slow train from the south instead of the desired south-bound, but they lined up along the platform to watch the arrival of the few passengers who were making a change. Then they hurried back to the warmth of the waiting room.

Only one girl remained behind to walk briskly up and down the platform. With a glad cry of surprise Julian hurried toward her.

"What are you doing here, Lottie?" he asked, as he took her hand in his. "Where are you going?" she countered.

"I was running down to town to see you," he explained. "And to think of finding you here, on your way to Linden."

"I was not going to Linden," declared the girl. "I was going on, but somehow I stepped off the train through habit, and the train went on without me."

"I was hoping that you were coming back to me," he said tenderly, but Lottie tossed her head.

"I told you that when you were ready to admit that you were at fault, I would not write, and that then perhaps I would come. You don't suppose that I would change my mind, do you?"

"No such luck," he admitted dimly. "That was why I was coming to you."

"No apostasy?" she demanded, and Julian nodded his head. A gleam of triumph flashed into Lottie's eyes, but she was not to be won so easily. She had very pronounced ideas on the proper way of handling the man she purposed to marry, and now that he was penitent, she was in no hurry to make the sweet surrender that Julian sought.

"I suppose you are saying that just because you want to make up," she declared jealously. "I don't know that it should count."

"You said that when I would admit that I was in the wrong you would be my friend again," reminded Julian.

"That was the use of admitting that you are wrong, when you don't mean it," argued Lottie. "You'll say the same things again the first time that you want to be nasty."

"Don't you believe it," advised Julian with convincing emphasis. "If you would only know how utterly miserable I have been since you went back to town! That was why I decided to come, instead of writing."

"And almost missed me," supplied Lottie. "I think, Julian, that I'll make my visit, and in the meantime think about coming to Linden on the way back."

Julian's face darkened. "I wish you'd make up now," he pleaded. "The fact that we met each other here at the Junction proves that it was meant by fate that we should be friends again."

For a moment the girl hesitated. She had meant to keep Julian on the anxious seat for a few weeks, but now that he was coming, penitent and contrite, she felt that perhaps it would be well to surrender before he should again change his mind. The patent leather tip of her shoe dug into the snow.

"It does seem a little like the working of fate," she admitted. "Here I go out of town to visit in Feltoville and you are on your way to town to see me. You are waiting at the Junction for a train that is late and I am left behind by my train."

"Then accept the omen and say that you will make up," he urged. "We can go back to town and pick out the ring and then we'll come back to Linden and tell the folks."

For another tense moment Lottie hesitated, then she nodded and Lottie gave a shout of joy.

"There's the whistle of our train," he cried. "I'll hurry in and get you a ticket back to town."

"I'm glad that he didn't know that I was on my way to give in," said Lottie half aloud. "It will be hard enough, anyway, to manage him without letting him know that."
