FRIDAY, APRIL 11, 1924.

The bonus might get place before the tax bill, but the old tax bill will be a close chaser.

The robbers who blew open the safes of the Standard Oil company, the Texas company and the Coca Cola company in Raleigh Monday night evidently had a business guide with them.

They knew the best businesses in Raleigh, which are coca cola and gasoline. Seems to be the case in small towns as well as in Raleigh.

We refer you the Br. R. Barnhill the Standard gas man, Simon Lilly and S. Collin Peel the Texaco men.

If you want business sell what the people want. You need not bother to try to sell them what they need regardless of whether or not it is a luxury.

This day and time furnish much astonishment. Not so many years ago one labored and all labored as much as ten to sixteen hours per day. To day eight hours is the limit with many and with others none at all and for still others, why a case of subtraction would have to be introduced to find out how much they do work.

The man in the ditch is as necessary to the welfare of society as the man who engineers the job; many don't believe it though. One class that is for the welfare of society is the human parasite—he is a drawback to his very class.

ANOTHER HOUSE BUILT ON SAND

The following editorial from The Carolina Magazine, published at the University, gives the college man's viewpoint, of the work of the average high school of the state:

The longer we remain in college the more we see freshmen classes enter and climb higher in grade classes, the more we are convinced that high schools in North Carolina are mere jokes. This is rather a serious charge, especially when it comes from a mere college editor; but we are sincere in our statement.

Time has been in this State when we were deeply ashamed of our illiteracy is gradually being wiped out. We are proud of it; on every occasion we harp about how North Carolina is progressing, and we imply that she is progressing educationally as well as materially whether we state it in so many words or not. But how thorough is the improvement?

We are forcibly impressed immediately following every set of examinations here that no matter how much we have improved in this respect we are as yet a poorly grounded class. We are graduating thousands of boys and girls from our high schools every year, encouraging and giving ample opportunity wherever possible for every single one of them to go to college. And then what happens? These freshmen realize after about three months of study that they have learned little or nothing in high school save how to read and write, and these may be in a very poor manner. Their training in previous years was not up to sufficiently high standard. The winds and the waves have come and their houses are bruised and battered, possibly completely wrecked. They have been poorly taught and in most cases passed and they now begin to pay the price.

All this leads up to the fact that on the whole North Carolina high schools are not strict enough when it comes to handing out diplomas, and their standards are far too low when compared with even the average college. If the educational leaders expect the youth of the State to be thoroughly educated, then the standards of the North Carolina high school must be raised. The boys and girls of today leave their high schools for college with their houses built on sand. They are not suitably prepared for college. It is not wholly their fault, but they bear the burden, they suffer.

COMMON HONESTY

THE CRYING NEED
In selecting officers of every class from the President of the United States down to the township constable honesty should be the prevalent idea of every citizen and voter. Ability which results in shrewdness and power to dominate is the general demand. Common honesty and horse sense are not required and apparently not desired.

We recall a prominent position in our own Government which is soon to be filled, and the friends of one of the aspirants to that office are commending him because he is a good trader which would properly be an objection to a man. What the people need is a representative that will not trade.

Trading has hurt the public in now states. Trading and traffic in public affairs is the serious trouble in Washington today. The oil scandal, the Air craft scandal, the Milk scandal and scores of other things are the direct results of trading either for money or for friendship.

The Capitol at Washington is one of the world's trading centers. A perfect and complete mad rush for every kind of game and scheme.

We must reward good and punish evil if enough of the good can be selected to do so. As yet the contrast between the two is not very evident.

NEED OF A WOMAN'S CLUB

Williamston is sadly in need of a Woman's club, composed of all white women 21 years and older.

Towns having such an organization have clean yards, beautiful streets, sanitary back lots, play grounds and libraries.

All women who are willing to join such a club please leave their names with Miss Daisy Wynne, who has gladly offered her services to help organize such a club.

Just think, such an organization could back a movement to secure a swimming pool, build an up-to-date playground and help to support many other projects vital to the welfare of every town and community.

What do the young people of the town think of having a swimming pool? Now is the time for the ladies of Williamston to act. Give your name to Miss Wynne and help get the club started.

It is rumored that Mayor Hassell will call a meeting of the white women of Williamston for the purpose of considering this organization. Will you lend your support?

With the forming of an undertaker's establishment here Williamston has another of its needs filled. There are many others yet to be filled.

It is gratifying to the people in the Coastal Plain Section to know that Highway No. 30 has been designated as the primary national defense route.

People along route 40 had contemplated changing the national defense road to their route and it looked as if they were going to succeed in getting the main line switched until recently when a meeting was held by the South Eastern Highway Association. At this meeting they concluded definitely to let the main road remain as was originally planned.

One case where business and safety travel before pleasure.
