

Measuring Test For Your Vocabulary

Several years ago, says a writer in the Cleveland Plain Dealer, I saw a list of words which had been chosen with a view to determining the size of one's vocabulary. It was said that from the number of these words one could define he could estimate the total number of words with which he was familiar.

A list of this kind, which was compiled by Prof. Lewis M. Turman, of Leland Stanford, Jr., University, was given some circulation three or four years back.

There are 100 words in this list, and ability to give 75 definitions indicates a working vocabulary of 13,000 words, according to Professor Turman's calculation. But in these days of "cross-word" puzzles it may not be an accurate guide.

The professor's list follows: arrange, bonfire, roar, gown, tap, scorch, puddle, envelop, straw, rule, waste, float, eyelash, copper, health, muse, guitar, mellow, pork, impolite, plumping; outward, lecture, dungeon; southern, noticeable, muzzle, quake, civil.

Treasury, reception, ramble, skill, amuse, insure, stave, regard, nerve, crunch, juggler, majesty, brunet, snip, push, sportive, hysterics, Mars, re-cess, shrewd, forfeit, peculiarity, coin-age, mosaic, bewail, disproportionate.

Dilapidated, charter, conscientious, avarice, artless, priceless, swaddle, tolerate, gelatinous, depredation, promontory, frustrate, milksop, phil-anthrop, irony, lotus, drabble, harpy, embody, infuse, flaunt, declivity, fen, ochre, exaltation.

Incrustation, laity, selectman, sapient, retroactive, achromatic, am-bergris, casuistry, paleology, perfu-riosity, precipitancy, theosophy, pisca-torial, sudorific, arterre, homunculus, cameo, shagreen, limpet, complot.—Washington Post.

Bringing Education To The Workshops

Various women's organizations and men's clubs are cooperating with the city school authorities of Chicago in Americanization work. An instance in point is described in School Life, published by the Bureau of Education of the Interior Department. Some workmen in railway yards, eager to learn English, secured through the yard physician the assistance of Miss Weimore, city superintendent of adult education. An empty freight car provided a place for the school.

Many other lines of Americanization work are carried on in Chicago. Mothers' classes are held in school buildings and settlement houses, where club women teach; classes for both men and women are held in nearly all great manufacturing plants; many department stores donate an hour of the worker's time for lessons, and porters and scrub women are taught. Training for this work is given by the board of education. At any time, any place, the year round, wherever there are people who want to be taught classes are established for them.
