THE POOR-MAN AND THE UNIVERSITIES

Mr. Ford's paper, the Dearborn Independent, has an article in a recent issue headed, "Should the Poor Have Children," which goes on to say:

"The very interesting president of the University of Michigan is reported in the press to favor, among other things, the decrease of children in the families of the poor. He says that in other families the deliberate limitation of offspring is already practiced. It is not a new proposal, but somehow it fails to lose, even with excessive repetition, its power to nauseate the reason. It is always the poor! Yet nobody defines the poor. The poor are those who live in the back street. But the boys of the back street usually become the bosses of the boys raised in the front street, fifteen years hence, and the girls are likely to be the wives and mothers of a race virile enough to save the country from the shrinkage in morals and energy that will come upon it through 'limited families.' For selfishness is the great immorality.

"Where are the poor? And what have the other classes, who can give their children 'all the advantages,' to promise for tomorrow? The poor of yesterday are in the seats of power today, and the families of yesterday that 'had all the advantages' are going to seed. It may be something in a boy's favor that he has to go to work at fifteen (if the Constitution of the United States continues to permit him that much liberty) and thus escape the University, which more than any industrial system molds men down to robots. Forbidden all the 'advantages,' he may have a chance to make his way in life.

"It may be possible one day to compel the poor to cease having children, but it is greatly to be hoped that no law will be proposed to compel the other classes to make up the deficiency. For the impression one gains from all this talk about limitation is that those who deliberately effect it are thereby conferring great benefit on the country. Those who can be brought into that camp do well by society in leaving no descendants. Meantime the 'school of hard knocks' will continue to have the most distinguished sons and daughters."

Most of the article is filled with rock-bottom truth. Yet a few shots are taken at the university man, who he denominates as "robots." It would seem, from the fellows like Mr. Ford, the late Mr. Duke, and many others, who have risen to that point where they could sway the world by money and its power, after all display more or less contempt for real men who make nations, most of whom come from the universities. Yet Mr. Ford would have boys leave school at 15 and enter the factory so he may have the advantage of making his way in life.

After all, if Mr. Ford wants to do a big thing for the people, let him drop the price of Fords and not charge a price that is exorbitant and is rapidly unbalancing the business conditions of the whole country.

It seems as if many folks never read the Word, "What doth it profit a man to grab the whole world and then have to stop making money?"

Mr. Ford goes further in his "Mr. Ford's Page," and says, "no one can have anything that others have; one can only have his own; and one's own is the product of one's ingenuity and energy combined.

This is a plain defense for Mr. Ford, but it is both unfair and untrue. Mr. Ford would have the world believe that he is more powerful in genius and energy than others. Certainly, he has lots of both; yet there are thousands of Ford riders today that have just as much of both genius and energy as Mr. Ford, but they have not been able to coin it into a monopoly.

The power of monopoly is what makes Mr. Ford rich, but every man can not enjoy that privilege. Mr. Ford should realize this, and outgrow any spirit of littleness and selfishness.

It seems to be man's goal to squeeze riches out of the masses when they are young only to give it away in old age, apparently for the purpose of appeasing the wrath of God.

SUCH IS THE FAITH OF MEN

WHY WE HAVEN'T GOT A WHOLE LOT OF MONEY

Some mathematicians are troubling themselves to find out what goes with so much money. They say the income for the year has been pretty good, since we produced good crops of nearly every kind; tobacco, cotton, peanuts, the leading crops, going above the average. They say that the country has received more than $3,000,000 for tobacco already, which would seem to revive things wonderfully.

While the cotton prices are not so good, yet the crop of the county will bring more than a million dollars, and the fine peanut crop will bring as much as the cotton crop.

All this money would seem to create a prosperous condition among the people, yet such does not seem to be true.

Some folks say we have too many ways to spend money now, lots of things that we did not have in the earlier days. A few of them would cause us to wonder how we are even see, we have automobile with rubber tires, and it takes gasoline to keep getting along as well as we are. You them going. We have the moving picture that costs a pile in the run of the year. The radio that we try to get joy through its static; it costs a lot, too. It is nothing but pleasure. Then comes the "pops" of all kinds, hauled to us in big trucks, and the paints and the powders. Yes, just hundreds of things to take all of our money.

After all, it make little difference how much we get; the great amount we spend is what counts against us
