LIQUOR GOING TO THE CHURCH

FOR SOBER

Liquor seems to be determined to assert itself again. It has always stood high in political councils; in fact it has dominated many nights in high places.

At this season round it necessary to go to the church for help and strength generally being content with the private support of the church through individual drinkers and occasional meetings and moonshiners who had such connection.

The liquor folks have now gone further in an attempt to put the law at defiance with leading church organizations, making them believe the law is failing.

It would seem that people could see through such camouflage as that and pay no attention to it. No man expects the law to make the people perfect. Yet everybody knows the law is helping the people, or the liquor folks would not be crying for its repeal or modification.

The German beer brewers and French wine manufacturers are fighting both in the American State and church for such modifications as will enable them to open up business.

Now is the time of great importance for people everywhere to fight against the liquor business in all its forms. Every line of the liquor forces is working over time and charging every point that can be found to abolish temperance laws.

The people who care for a better development of society and are interested in sobriety should remember that the liquor fight must be continued. It may be that liquor will be here to trouble us for a century, but if it is a bad thing it is worth fighting against, even if it does take a hundred years.

Remember, the law is all right, but like other laws it does not make perfect men. It restrains them, thereby helping them and the community in which they live.

AFFECTION

By James D. Taylor

If you have a friend worth loving
Love. Yes; and let him know
That you love him ere life's evening
Tinge his brow with sunset glow.
Why should good words ne'er be said
Of a friend till he is dead?

A visitor walked into the office of Frank Munsey, unseen and unheard by the great publisher, who was looking out of the window with his back to his visitor. When Mr. Munsey turned and saw him, he said, "I beg your pardon. I was just thinking that today is my birthday, and I have no family, only an older sister. I wonder if it's worth while."

"Money and power is good to have if judiciously used. We all want this, more or less, and perhaps it is well that we do. But there is something far more valuable. A friend, 'some one who cares.' Children express their love for those about them. Why should not this continue on as we grow older. How often we are ashamed to express the tenderness we feel. So much is taken for granted that often those we love do not know it. I have just read of a woman very ill in a sanitarium who received a note from a friend, 'I love you dearly.' The woman's face was all sunshine when she said, 'How dear of her to tell me. I did not know she cared so much for me.'"

There are those we love dearly whom we are with daily. We are happy to be near them. So happy that we forget to tell them we care. How will they know it unless we tell them? Just a smile, or a little deed full of gentle thoughtfulness helps, but that full sweet word often helps more. We may feel deeply but are unable to express our feeling in words. Then there is the language of actions. But there is always a way to express our love. Words or actions, or both.

Edgar Allen Poe, troubled and discouraged, wandered here and there, looking hungrily at life, longing for kindness for tenderness, for "some one who cared." His foster-father treated him with much less consideration than he would have treated a pet dog. Poe's greatness was not known by many then. One day his figure was found cold and lifeless. His fame is now world wide, but he died unhappy and alone. While he lived he was alone with loneliness.

Those little words that come from beneath the commonplace of common things, cause us to carry on when we see our way blocked far in front. And when we are strangers in a strange land, we can turn back to them and drink afresh and quench our thirst. Let us open our heart and express our love to those that are near and dear to us while they are with us. For if we don't, there will come a time when out of sight they will go, and some time, some where, after they have gone, we will think of 'some word that we might have said and they might have heard.'

TEN-ACRE TOBACCO CROP BRINGS $6,000.00

(Clipping from The Raleigh News &amp; Observer)

"Kinston, N. C., Nov. 12th.—A ten-acre crop of Tobacco on the farm of J. E. Mumford of Pitt County has paid him more than $6,000 this fall. He has received more than $600 per acre for the production in spite of the early season slump. Most of the $6,000 represented profit to Mumford, according to warehouse acquaintances here, since he is a "live-at-home" grower, producing his own pork, grain, and other necessities."

Gentlemen:

I used on my tobacco crop in 1925 750 pounds per acre of VELVET TOBACCO GROWER, and on another part of my crop 1,000 pounds per acre of your SUNSHINE TOBACCO GROWER.

We had 5 acres in tobacco, from which we harvested 7,298 pounds, and sold the same for a net return of $3,023.01. This, you will see, is a net yield of something over $625.00 per acre. I intend to use your goods on my 1926 crop.
